Penetrate German Line 500 Yards on 3,500 Yard Front—After Gallant Brilliant Work Are Forced Back By Fierce Bombardment and Large Reinforcements of the Enemy—Troops From Four Provinces March Through Sheet of Flame.

GREAT FEAT BY WESTERNERS

OTTAWA, Oct. 13.—A despatch from the Canadian War Records Office concerning the recent activities of the Canadian troops at the front reads in full as follows:

Early Sunday morning, Oct. 8th, the Canadian troops attacked the German position upon a frontage of 3,500 yards and on an average depth of about 500 yards.

The enemy at this point occupied particularly strong entrenchments, some of which were so placed upon a reverse slope that close direct observation by day was impossible. For the greater portion heavy wire entanglements were known to exist, and it was afterwards found that although the artillery had successfully cut many lanes through the wire, a formidable obstacle to infantry assaults still remained. Despite the intense preliminary bombardment, a number of German machine guns continued in action.

As the long rows of our men approached through the morning gloom they were met by a sweeping machine gun and rifle fire. One wounded man afterwards remarked that it was like walking through a sheet of flame. None the less, each battalion pressed resolutely forward, the leading men broke through the enemy, and despite an energetic resistance, including a heavy fire of hand grenades, which continued to the last moment, succeeded in reaching and entering a large part of their objectives. There, as usually the case, the survivors of the German garrisons, finding themselves in close contact with our men, readily surrendered.

However, we were not uniformly successful along the whole frontage, and during the day varying fortunes attended the successful elements in their efforts to consolidate and maintain the captured positions.

Ontario Battalion's Hard Task.

On the right a task of special difficulty in the capture of a criss-cross formation of strong German trenches known as the "quadrilateral" had been assigned to an Ontario battalion. This battalion, encountered heavy wire on their right flank, burst through on the left and, organizing a bombing party, steadily worked their way east until the whole of the first enemy lines were in their possession. Between 150 and 200 prisoners belonging to different German regiments, including a marine division, were captured. The trenches were found to have suffered severely from our artillery fire, and as a further consequence of the bombing and bayonet fighting they were in places literally heaped with German dead.

Shortage of Bombs.

Difficulty was experienced in securing a supply of bombs. The weather, which had been threatening during the night, became very rainy, and not only rendered the work of consolidation difficult, but prevented aerial observation, and so deprived us of an advantage which is usually ours.

Under Fierce Artillery.

Not long after our occupation the enemy artillery began to range upon the trenches with increasing intensity. During the morning two attempts by local enemy forces to recover the lost ground by bombing attacks were fruitless, our men stoutly resisting. The Germans hurriedly brought up reinforcements, however, and in the early afternoon, after a half hour's concentrated bombardment, launched a determined attack from three directions against the centre of the "Quadrilateral." Our men were gradually compelled to withdraw to east and west until the whole position was evacuated. Nothing daunted, they organized successful bombing counter-attacks, but were unable to re-establish themselves.

Great Feat by Westerners.

In the meantime, on their immediate left a battalion from British Columbia was performing a feat of arms which has hardly as yet been equalled in this war.

After a difficult advance of nearly 300 yards the men of this regiment with a characteristically impetuous charge broke into the greater part of their objective there, and killed or captured the entire German garrison, and then settled down with grim determination to hold what they had taken.

Stopped Enemy's Advance.

Early in the morning their western flank becoming exposed, the survivors of the regiment on their left were pressed back by hostile counter-attacks, and a few of them moved eastwards. Here a successful stand was made, a block constructed, and the enemy advance definitely arrested.

By three o'clock in the afternoon their eastern flank was also exposed by the enforced withdrawal of the right battalion as already described. None the less they continued obstinately to maintain their position, although they were now in an isolated situation 300 yards in advance of our other lines. They remained until darkness when they received orders to withdraw.

One Gun Crew Blocked Hun Attack.

At 9 o'clock the retirement began and in the midst of it the Germans launched the fresh attack with large numbers of men. An officer with the crew of a Lewis machine gun, remaining to cover the retirement, opened fire and successfully held off the attack until the gallant defenders were able to disengage and reach their former positions in safety. He himself and his men then withdrew, taking their gun with them.

The left was less fortunate, although pushed with equal gallantry, heavy wire was encountered, and in the obscurity the men could not perceive the gaps.

Killing the Calves—All sorts of excuses are offered for the high price of beef, the most plausible being the alleged demand for veal—"the killing of calves which should be allowed to grow into regular beef." You cannot have beef if you eat it as "veal," but you can have Shredded Wheat Biscuit which contains more real nutriment than beef and costs much less. Shredded wheat biscuit is the whole wheat steam-cooked, shredded and baked. Make it your "meat" for ten days and see how much better you feel. Wholesome and strengthening for any meal with milk or cream or in combination with fruits.

COST OF FUNERALS MAY COME DOWN

MONTREAL, Oct. 13.— While the cost of living even in the most economical manner is continuing to go up, the cost of dying is likely to come down. At least, this is the way matters are understood by Ald. Georges Vandelac, of Montreal, who is leaving for Quebec to attend a conference of provincial undertakers there with a view to reducing the cost of funerals.

"It is said that the cost of funerals in Montreal is too high," Ald. Vandelac declared, "and it is to try and arrange a standard throughout the province that we are meeting at Quebec."

THE LITTLE FORTUNE

BY ARNOLD FREDERICKS

The doctor reported that a compound fracture of the skull indicated that death had probably been instantaneous. The man had evidently pitched headlong upon the heavy mass of machinery, as both his head and face were frightfully crushed and bruised.

Duvall, firm in the belief that the body of the purser had been thrown into the hold after death, requested the doctor to search carefully for other wounds; but none were apparent. His theory seemed to collapse completely. Yet, how account for the minute blood-stains on the door of Haussman's room?

A still further surprise, however, awaited the little group surrounding the body.

When the pockets were searched, and the various papers, letters, and trinkets belonging to the dead man had been collected on the desk in a little pile, the doctor drew from one of the side pockets of the coat a crumpled envelope, which Mr. Morris immediately declared to be the one entrusted by him to the purser.

An examination showed the seal had been broken, apparently by the force of the fall. Inside the envelope were a one-franc piece of the period of the First Napoleon and a letter addressed to Mlle. Estelle Mercier.

The captain handed the package over to Mr. Morris.

"This is your property, sir," he remarked sadly. "I regret that the seal is broken, but apparently the contents, as heretofore described by you, are intact."

"Yes," replied the banker; "but why should the purser have had this in his pocket instead of in the safe?"

"That, my dear sir, we shall in all probability never know. I am glad, however, that the affair has so far been cleared up. Vernon is dead. Your package is returned to you. There is nothing more that we can do."

SAYS HOT WATER WASHES POISONS FROM THE LIVER

To feel as fine as the proverbial fiddle, we must keep the liver washed clean, almost every morning, to prevent its sponge-like pores from clogging with indigestible material, sour bile and poisonous toxins, says a noted physician.

If you get headaches, it's your liver. If you catch cold easily, it's your liver. If you wake up with a bad taste, furred tongue, nasty breath or stomach becomes rancid, it's your liver. Sallow skin, muddy complexion, watery eyes all denote liver uncleanliness. Your liver is the most important, also the most abused and neglected organ of the body. Few know its function or how to release the dammed-up body waste, bile and toxins. Most folks resort to violent calomel, which is a dangerous, salivating chemical which can only be used occasionally because it accumulates in the tissues, also attacks the bones.

Every man and woman, sick or well, should drink each morning before breakfast, a glass of hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it, to wash from the liver and bowels the previous day's indigestible material, the poisons, sour bile and toxins; thus cleansing, sweetening and freshening the entire alimentary canal before putting more food into the stomach

Limestone phosphate does not restrict the diet like calomel, because it can not salivate, for it is harmless and you can eat anything afterwards. It is inexpensive and almost tasteless, and any pharmacist will sell you a quarter pound, which is sufficient for a demonstration of how hot water and limestone phosphate cleans, stimulates and freshens the liver, keeping you feeling fit day in and day out.

DYSPEPSIA OF WOMEN

Special Treatment Required.

Many women suffer from a form of indigestion or dyspepsia which does not yield to ordinary treatment. While the symptoms are similar to those of ordinary indigestion, yet the medicines usually prescribed do not restore the patient's normal condition.

There seems to be a kind of dyspepsia caused by derangement of the female organism. While this appears to be the same as ordinary indigestion it can be relieved only by a medicine which, besides acting as a stomach tonic, is good for female ailments. Read what such a medicine did for Mrs. Williams :—

She says:—"Before I began taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I was troubled with dyspepsia and bearing down pains in my back and sides, and after my meals my stomach would bloat up till I could scarcely get my breath. At times I was so weak I could hardly stand on my feet and I looked hollow-eyed and my skin was yellow. Now I have a good color, have gained in every way and can do my work without any pains. I think it is the best medicine on earth for stomach troubles of women."—Mrs. NELLIE WILLIAMS, 21 West 3d Street, New Albany, Ind.

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

LADY'S KIMONO.

By Anabel Worthington.

If you care at all for a kimono you will like this one with the front and back in one piece, and will enjoy wearing it.

Very much in style is the fulness of the garment, which is not confined at any point, and yet notice how prettily it is moulded to the figure across the shoulders at the back and front; the excellent lines of the pattern make this possible.

The [illegible] of the fronts are faced with ribbon one and one-half inches wide, so are the pretty, flowing sleeves, but bands of contrasting color goods will give satisfaction and a pretty finish, when the fabric making the kimono may not require a facing or binding of ribbon.

At the top of a deep yoke two ball buttons and a loop fasten the garment. By copying this design, comfort may be gained at the slightest effort and cost.

The kimono may be made of cotton crepe, voile, dimity, china silk, washable satin, dotted swiss or the flowered fabrics.

The pattern, No. 7,942, is cut in one size only. To make will require 4¾ yards of 36 inch material and 6½ yards of ribbon or banding.

You may obtain the pattern by sending 10 cents to the office of this publication.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required, and age of a child.

Price 10 cents, or 2 for 25 cents.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

The Prince of a Hundred Years

A Love Story

By AGNES G. BROGAN

A very young girl stood before a mirror putting the last touches to her toilet. A card bearing a man's name lay on the dresser before her. She was preparing to go down to see him, but the preparation was rather for delay than for her adornment.

She knew very well for what he had come. He had been to see her often before for the same purpose. He had offered her his love. She had neither declined nor accepted him. She had not declined him because she was not sure but that she would regret having done so if she had and she had not accepted him because it did not seem to her that she felt a c[illegible] to which she considered would come [illegible] once she had been stricken by the a[illegible] god.

When she could think of nothing more to add to her toilet, when she had for the last time adjusted the rose in her hair, smoothed away a crease here and there in her costume, she placed her hand upon the doorknob and stood irresolute.

"What shall I say to him?"

She could not decide. Turning, she looked through the window and saw a peaceful garden. And there, too, in the garden was a woman.

The very young girl burst tempestuously into the peaceful garden, and her eyes were bright with tears.

"I came for a sight of you, Felice," she said, "to calm my troubled spirit. It is Billie again, of course, and he will have his answer. Now, how is a girl to be sure of her heart who has not seen the world? One might my yes today and be filled with regret tomorrow.

"Oh, for a sign by which we women might know our own true prince when he comes! You remember the olden fairy tales, and your gift for making different stories of each to satisfy my demand for 'just one more?' Always I found you here among your flowers, Felice, understanding of each rebellious, childish mood.

"Well, I'm a rebellious child again today, and I will rest my wayward head upon your dear shoulder while you weave for me a new version of—shall it be 'The Sleeping Princess and the Prince Who Awakened Her After a Hundred Years?'"

Musingly the woman smiled; then low she told the story:

"The princess sat high on the garden wall while her golden tresses streamed out in the breeze like a shimmering fan. Upon her gleaming crown was perched saucily a soldier's cap, and from beneath its brim she glanced half shyly, half daringly, at the young prince beside her.

"'An you wear my cap,' he warned, 'I shall surely steal a kiss.'

"With a soft mirthful laugh the girl sprang to the ground.

"'Never in all your life,' she mocked, 'shall you kiss me.'

"For a moment their eyes met steadily, his gravely pleading, hers bright, yet fearful; then the girl ran swiftly down the path.

"Charmed, intent, the prince gazed after her departing figure; then from its case came his violin, while the unspoken longings which he himself had hardly known breathed forth in music.

"When as the music quivered to a minor key, slowly the girl crept back to sit at his side. Hand in hand they lingered, while the young, pale moon rose in the sky.

"'Tomorrow you will come again?' pleaded the prince at parting.

"Overcome by a new and inexplicable shyness the princess shook her head. 'Tomorrow I shall have duties,' she told him.

"So while the roses bloomed and the bees droned in the garden, there the young prince walked his lady's pleasure, glad for a smile that she gave him, silent before her taunting, speaking his love in music.

"And, as in teasing mood, the princess danced from him one day down the winding path toward the river, she came upon another youth, one who bowed low before her, as a subject salutes his princess, one whose eyes were filled with a worshipful adoration, which the prince's eyes, in all their tenderness, had never shown.

"The princess motioned to the youth to rise from his place at her feet, and her heart was filled with the spirit of adventure.

"'Come,' she said, 'you shall teach me to row your boat on the river and shall gather for me lilies out far, where I cannot reach them.'

"And as the youth bent eagerly to his oars she was gay and friendly and kind as she had never been in the presence of the prince.

"'Your eyes,' the youth reverently told her, 'are blue as the sky at early evening; your hair is like a cloth of gold; your lips have stolen their crimson from the berries.'

"And the princess smiled and was pleased, for the prince had never told her any of these things.

"'I love you,' said the youth, 'and you love me, and we must speedily be married.'

"'Are you quite sure,' she asked him, 'that I do love you?'

"'Quite sure,' he answered firmly.

"And as he went all joyfully up the path from the river he saw the prince there in the sleepy garden, his violin locked silent in its case.

"'I am to marry the princess,' the youth cried jubilantly, 'for though I am but a humble subject she loves me royally.'

"'She—loves—you?' the prince repeated, and his words were like a sighing breath.

"Then dumbly he sat down to wait, and later, when the princess found him there, a great hunger came over her to go and sit at his side, to fold her little fingers up in the clasp of his strong hand, to hear again the message of his music. Yet when he asked abruptly, 'You are to marry the youth?' she remembered that the prince had never really spoken love, had never praised the beauty of her eyes. And in that strange and sudden perversity which his nearness seemed to provoke the princess tossed her head.

"'Yes, I am to marry the youth,' she taunted. 'I am to marry the youth.'

"She watched him pass through the little gate in the hedge wondering how soon, how very soon, he must come back.

"But the prince did not come. The summer moon turned into a round, red harvest moon; the rides upon the river grew tiresome; the water lilies were all gone. Pettishly the princess turned one day from regarding the youth.

"'I am so tired of it all,' she said, 'and I'm vastly tired of you.'

"To the heart of the wildwood then she wandered that the youth might not seek her there, and here half buried by the brown leaves on the ground reclined the figure of another man.

"He was studiously intent, she noticed, upon a book spread out before him, and even the rustling of her draperies failed to attract his attention. Interested, the princess came nearer, peering over his shoulder; still the man remained absorbed. Wilfully she broke a branch above his head, awaiting his startled glance.

"Absently the man looked up into her face; then with a frown of annoyance resumed his study. In anger the princess stamped her foot.

"'You are my subject,' she cried, 'and ignore my presence. You pay me homage to my power.'

"As though reluctant the man closed his book.

"'I serve as a student, madam,' he replied, 'and must therefore devote every moment to study.'

"Suddenly the princess leaned toward him with an alluring smile. 'You must also,' she said, 'serve me.' So piqued by his indifference, she came each day to charm the student from his purpose. And as they strolled together through the shaded paths he unfolded to her the secret of each leaf and flower.

"'When I have finished my course,' said the student, 'you shall love me forever and ever.'

"But now in the moment of her triumph the princess turned coldly aside. With thoughtful brows she walked back through the wood. To those who appeared now and then and here and there and would have walked at her side she gravely shook her head.

"'For,' she said, 'I would rather go my way alone.'

"Just as the afternoon was drawing to a close and the sun was going down gloriously beyond the old wall she slipped through the little gate into her own home garden.

"A scarlet drooping vine, a haunting chord of melody, seemed to recall some vaguely pleasant recollection. But the princess was now too tired to remember; so, being quite alone and among the nodding flowers"—

"The princess fell asleep," the woman went on—she smiled wistfully—"asleep, I think, for a hundred years."

"When the prince returned to awaken her heart," the girl added.

The woman smiled and sighed.

"True, princes do not always come back," she said.

Laughing, the girl jumped to her feet. "You are in league with Billie!" she accused.

Slowly the gate in the hedge swung inward to admit a man's tall, soldierly figure. With hat held well out from his straight white forelock, he advanced toward Miss Felice.

"You have forgotten me perhaps?" he asked slowly. "But I should have known you among all the world. Time with you, as with the old garden, seems to have stood still, yet many years have passed, years with me absorbed in music, its study and its triumph. When I thought of you it was always—as the wife of another man. Last night only upon returning to my own land I knew." He paused abruptly to put forth supplicating hands. "Felice," he breathed. Still the woman stood motionless, unmoved, as one in a dream.

With a little cry the girl rushed forward. "I thought I knew your face, professor," she said. "Last night I was there, at your wonderful concert. Oh, won't you play for us now?"

A moment the musician hesitated, looking into the unresponsive eyes of the woman, then his fingers caressed the old violin; a melody filled the air.

The girl, lingering beside the hedge, watched breathlessly. She saw the face of her friend upraised in radiant, glowing wonder, the other bent so tenderly above it. Then the very young girl stepped out of the garden, softly closing the gate behind her. "The Prince of a Hundred Years," she [illegible]

Wheat Selling in Peterboro' At $1.50 a Bushel

A drop of fifty cents a hundred weight in the price of live hogs and an increase of from ten to fifteen cents a bushel in the price of Ontario wheat, are two of the chief price fluctuations in this week's market. Live hogs are now selling at ten dollars and fifty cents a hundred, with the prospect of still lower prices.

When hogs were bringing $11.90 fed and $12.15 off cars the weekly receipts amounted to something like 15,000, and this no less than two weeks ago. With prices down to $10.50 the receipts fell to 10,000. Proceeding on the same mathematical basis, the receipts this week may go down to 6,000 or 7,000. This seems very likely to happen, as the number of hogs shipped on the first two days of the week tends to show. Less than 1,000 hogs were shipped to Toronto live stock yards on Monday and Tuesday. The Monday shipments are generally light, but even those of Tuesday amounted to only 840.

Wheat Market.

One dollar and fifty cents a bushel is the price that is being paid in Peterborough for good milling wheat. Last week the price was one dollar and thirty-five to one dollar and forty cents. There is a good local demand for wheat, and farmers in this section of the country have nothing to gain by shipping it to outside points.

Produce Market.

Butter is still performing on the high wire, and there seems to be no limit to the movement of this commodity. The general use of aeroplans at the front accustoms us to dizzy altitudes, but the dizziest altitude attained by an army flier is nothing to what our own butter can do at home. And by the way, it is suggested that if they want to get up still higher over there they would do well to take a box of butter along with them. But there is no cause for complaint in this for dairymen. They are receiving unheardof prices for their product. As for the ultimate consumer—well, he is the one to worry.

This week it is selling at forty and forty-two cents a pound.

Eggs are selling for 38c a dozen.

The local demand for eggs continues good and there is also a fairly good demand for cold storage stock, consequently the market on the whole is active with a firm undertone.

Eggs at New York.

Eggs are from 5c to 7c higher at New York this week. Prices are as follows: Fresh eggs, 52c to 55c per dozen; ordinary to good, 38c to 50c; and gathered white, 35c to 50c per dozen.

This week New Brunswick potatoes are quoted around $1.90 a bag.

These New Brunswick potatoes are a new feature on Ontario markets. In the past the Prince Edward Island crop has been loaded on boats and sold at American ports. But recently a car ferry has been put into operation between the Island and Nova Scotia, which permits of cars being loaded on the Island, shipped across to the mainland and whirled off to the Ontario and Quebec markets, where they are given a good reception. The Prince Edward Island potatoes figure here this year for the first time in many years.

Price Situation.

HAVE YOU tried Zam-Buk for those disfiguring pimples and blackheads? Others have used it with great success, and we are confident you will not be disappointed.

Someone recommended Zam-Buk and I commenced using it. To my delight the pimples and blackheads gradually began to disappear, until now my face is entirely cleared of them. I am, indeed, grateful for what Zam-Buk has done for me, and should like all others who are troubled as I was to know of this wonderful ointment."

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON QUESTIONS

October 15, 1916.

The Appeal to Caesar. Acts 25.

Golden Text. It is enough for the disciple that he be as his teacher, and the servant as his lord. Matt. 10:25.

1. Verses 1-6. What was the plot the high priest tried to form with which to destroy Paul?

2. Which and why, according to history, have been the vilest liars and all round knaves, High Priests without religion, or politicians without moral principle?

3. Which is the better or worse, and why, a professed religious man who is dishonest in his acts, or a worldly man who will not stoop to an admittedly mean thing? (This is one of the questions which may be answered in writing by the members of the Club.)

Verses 1-5. Festus was a Roman, the High Priest a Jew, which was the better man, and why?

4. To what extent is it fair to judge of a religion by its professors, taking this incident with others, as the basis of your opinion?

5. Verses 6, 7. How is it that so called "Holy wars" and sectarian controversies are much more cruel and bitter than other wars and other controversies?

7. Why did the Jews hate Paul so that they wanted to destroy him either with or without legal process?

8. Verses 8-12. When the judge is convinced of the innocence of a prisoner, as Festus evidently was of that of Paul, and does not discharge him for political considerations, how would you characterise him?

7. Paul evidently appealed to Caesar for fear Festus would send him to Jerusalem for trial, why would you say or not, that his fear was well founded?

10. If Paul had pressed his motion for immediate discharge, what would you consider his chances would have been for winning his case?

See Acts 25:22.

11. Verses 9-12. Even if Festus had given his verdict to send Paul to Jerusalem, why could not Paul then have appealed to Caesar on the ground of his Roman citizenship, and have demanded to be sent to Rome for trial?

12. Verse 13. Kings go a long way to salute kings, and other persons in official positions, what would be the effect upon the community if men and women of all ranks were to make a habit of doing the same thing to one another on appropriate occasions?

13. Verses 14-21. We must admire Festus' clear statement of the facts to King Agrippa, but what do the same facts indicate of the character of Festus

14. Verses 14-21. To what extent is it a guarantee of a noble character that a man is in a prominent position and is a lucid speaker?

15. Which are the better judges of right and wrong, and most capable of rendering a just judgment, worldly men or church members without religion?

16. Why is it that the religious leaders of the Jews were anxious to put Paul to death without trial, while Festus a secular officer of Rome, would not condemn him without proof of his guilt?

17. Verse 22. What motives probably influenced Agrippa to want to hear Paul? (See Acts 25:23.)

18. Knowing what you do of Paul and his preaching how do you account for the murderous hatred of the leaders of the Jews against him?

19. Is there any such spirit in any modern or present day ecclesiastical body as animated by the Jews against Paul? If so please specify.

20. In what way do you consider that the words of Festus to King Agrippa, when introducing the case of Paul, showed a true and a noble spirit?

TURN HAIR DARK WITH SAGE TEA

If Mixed With Sulphur It Darkens So Naturally Nobody Can Tell

The old-time mixture of Sage Tea and Sulphur for darkening gray, streaked and faded hair is grandmother's recipe, and folks are again using it to keep their hair a good, even color, which is quite sensible, as we are living in an age when a youthful appearance is of the greatest advantage.

Nowadays, though, we don't have the troublesome task of gathering the sage and the musy mixture at home. All drug stores sell the ready-to-use product, improved by the addition of other ingredients, called "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound" for about 50 cents a bottle. It is very popular because nobody can discover it has been applied. Simply moisten your comb or a soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the gray hair disappears, but what delights the ladies with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound, is that, besides beautifully darkening the hair after a few applications, it also produces that soft lustre and appearance of abundance which is so attractive. This ready-to-use preparation is a delightful toilet requisite for those who desire a more youthful appearance. It is not intended for the cure, mitigation or prevention of disease.

Give and heal!

An urgent call for help again goes forth from the Motherland's mighty life-saving agency — the British Red Cross. The Empire is called upon to give greatly, give lovingly, give quickly, that the sick, wounded and suffering on all the battle fronts may not languish and perish in their hours of deepest need.

Here is a great work in which all can share. The Joint War Committee of the British Red Cross Society and Order of St. John is the only institution which carries voluntary aid to the sick and wounded of the British forces on land and sea in every region of the war. Thousands of lives of our bravest and best are saved through this splendid work. YOUR gift may save a life. Isn't it worth doing? It is. GIVE!

The Red Cross looks after the transportation of sick and wounded—it equips thousands of hospitals, rest and convalescent homes, it supplies countless requisites for hospital work, clothing and other comforts. Over 2,000 Red Cross Motor Ambulances are at work on the various fronts, while "rest stations," hospital trains, steamers and launches, food for prisoners, books, special work for the blind, etc., etc., are a few, only, of Red Cross activities.

Give on October 19th

The Sick and Wounded Call For Your Help

Give on October 19th

Ontario's princely gift in 1915 of $1,514,000 rang a clarion mercy call throughout the Empire. The British Red Cross were grateful beyond measure, and their appeal through Lord Lansdowne, President, now comes to us as to friends who sympathise and help. The need is greater to-day than a year ago—it is ever growing. Will Ontario do less than she did last year? No! GIVE—give a day's pay, give all you can, GIVE.

Your gift will go entirely to the British Red Cross, where, again, through much voluntary work, the working expenses are cut down to only 2½% of the total revenue. Thus, if you give $10, actually $9.77½ goes to the healing and saving of some stricken hero. The expenses of the Ontario Committee, advertising, printing, etc., are being met entirely by the Provincial Government.

Premier Hearst Has Seen the Work

"My visit to England and France has aroused deeper appreciation than ever of the splendid work of the Red Cross. It deserves every support, and I trust the people of Ontario will respond with their usual generosity to the British Red Cross Appeal for October 19th."

HON. W. H. HEARST,
Prime Minister of Ontario.

Mr. N. W. Rowell, K.C., Brings a Red Cross Message

"I bring a message of cheer to those who have relatives at the front and who fear they may be wounded. I believe everything human skill can do, that human care and sympathy can provide, is being done and provided each day and each night throughout the year by the Army Medical Corps and the Red Cross. It is a perfect marvel of efficiency."

MR. N. W. ROWELL, K.C.,
Leader of the Opposition.

He gives twice who gives quickly. Your help is needed NOW!

The Motherland's only direct appeal to us for help in this great war is her great Red Cross mercy work. Ontario's response must and will be quick and generous. Give through the Treasurer of your Local Committee—or, send your subscription to the Clerk of your municipality—or, make it payable to Hon. T. W. McGarry, Treasurer British Red Cross Fund for Ontario, Parliament Buildings, Toronto.

British Troops Advance On Somme Front

MAUSER WORKS AT OBENDORF BOMBED

ALLIED AVIATORS DROP FIVE TONS OF PROJECTILES ON MAUSER WORKS

Successful Air Raid Pulled Off By the Franco-British Birdmen Who Attacked Obendorf---Shot Down Six Enemy Machines During Raid---British Advance on a Front of a Mile and One-half Between Guedecourt and Le Bœufs.

A SUMMARY OF TO-DAY'S WAR CABLES

PARIS (French Official), October 13.—Franco-British air squadrons last night bombarded the Mauser Works at Obendorf, dropping nearly five tons of projectiles, it was officially announced to-day. On both sides of the Somme, artillery activity was rather violent last night especially in the sectors of Morval, Bouchavesnes, Ablaincourt and Chaulnes.

Six German machines defending the works were shot down. The works in question are fifty miles across the German border, and the planes have to fly over Alsace and Baden.

British Gain at a Number of Points

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

LONDON, October 13.—British troops advanced on the front extending from Gueudecourt to Les Bœufs, "about one and one-half miles," in severe fighting north of the Somme last night, General Haig reported this afternoon. Gains were also made northwest of Gueudecourt and 160 prisoners taken.

A German attack north of Staff redoubt was driven off. Fourteen British raiding parties entered enemy trenches in the regions of Ypres and Armentieres during the night returning with prisoners and inflicting casualties.

Germans Withdrawing Their Heavy Guns

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

WITH THE FRENCH ARMIES ON THE SOMME FRONT, October 13.—The Germans have withdrawn their heavy guns from one and a half to five miles behind their Somme front, Anglo-French aviators have discovered in recent flights. The withdrawal was ordered to save the pieces from capture. In the recent dashes of Allied infantry into the German lines, many heavy guns have been taken before the Germans had an opportunity to withdraw them. The Germans now have 2,100 guns opposite the French and British on the thirty-mile Somme front, compared with the 1,000 guns they used in the attack on Verdun. Of this number six hundred are south of the Somme facing the French, and 650 opposite the French north of the Somme. The British are opposed by 850 German guns. Since the Allied offensive began more than 500 German guns have been captured.

Vienna Admits The Retreat of Austrians

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

VIENNA, October 13.—Italian troops have gained some ground six and one-half miles south of Gorizia in their violent offensive, it was officially announced to-day, but have left prisoners in Austrian hands. In the Passubio region, the Austrians have also withdrawn somewhat.

Cannot Make War As America Wants

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

BERLIN, Germany, October 13.—Because Canada is at war with Germany and is sending her transports full of men, and her freighters full of munitions and supplies, Germany must operate submarines along the Canadian and United States coasts no matter how uncomfortable it make matters for the United States. This is the answer made to-day by August Thyssen, German Steel Trust King, when asked regarding the position taken by Germany in this matter. "Germany cannot always make war as America wants," he said.

There is a big campaign in Germany at present, to use submarines to their best, in answer to Lloyd George's knock-out declarations.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 13.—United States naval officials here to-day admitted that the United States' destroyers are now combing the Atlantic coast waters for evidence of a German sub base somewhere along the shore.

AMSTERDAM, Oct. 13.—Chancellor Hollweg has escaped from the submarine crisis strengthened by his victory over the advocates of unlimited submarining, the Munch Neuster Nachrichte Nachrichten declares. "He will continue his policy with the support of the Kaiser and Von Hindenburg," the newspaper added.

NO FURTHER DETAILS IN REGARD TO THE CANADIAN BATTLE

During Past Week or Ten Days Canadian Casualties Published Have Averaged a Thousand a Day Says Ottawa Report

INFORMATION IS LACKING

Examiner Special:

OTTAWA, Ont., Oct. 13.—Apart from the cable received yesterday from Canadian representatives at the front no detailed information concerning the severe fighting in which the Canadians were engaged on October 8 has yet been received by militia headquarters here. Questioned this morning concerning the existence of machine guns and barbed wire entanglements after allied bombardment, an official pointed out that the Canadians charged over the brow of a hill, and that the existence of the hill probably explained the fact that the ground had not been properly cleared beyond it. However, only Gen. Byng or Sir Douglas Haig is in a position to explain the reverse, and they are not likely to do so. During the past week or ten days Canadian casualties have averaged about a thousand a day.

Gen. Hughes is absent from Ottawa to-day and it is not known, therefore, whether he has received any private information concerning the battle.

Wounded.

Pte. Jas. Tierney, Canadian Infantry, 507 Rubidge street.

Peterborough's roll of honour, which is daily increasing, has two additions to-day, in Sergt. Warden Brown and Pte. Jas. Tierney, obth of whom went overseas with the 59th Battalion last spring.

Sergeant Warden Brown, who is officially reported wounded to-day, is a son of Mr. Andrew Brown, 319 Park street, the local real estate agent, and is well known throughout the city. No particulars have been received. Sergeant Brown enlisted in Lindsay with the 59th Battalion and went overseas with Lt.-Col. Dawson's unit in the spring of this year. He was afterwards transferred to another Eastern Ontario battalion at the front.

Pte. Jas. Tierney.

Mrs. Katharine Tierney, 507 Rubidge street, received a message from Ottawa last night to the effect that her husband, Pte. Jas. Tierney, Canadian Infantry, is officially reported admitted to No. 10 General Hospital, Rouen, on Oct. 1st, wounded in the right foot. Pte. Tierney enlisted here last spring, just before the departure of the 59th Battalion, when that unit made a final appeal here for recruits. In the spring of 1915 he was a member of the local detachment of the 39th, but was discharged from that battalion. He was determined to get overseas, however, and got his change last spring. He went over with the 59th, but was transferred to another Canadian battalion.

Pte. Scriver Shell-shocked.

Miss Grace Scriver, Nicholls Hospital, received an official message this afternoon to the effect that her brother, Pte. Hugh Scriver, Medical Services, is reported admitted to No. 12 General Hospital, Rouen, suffering from shell shock. He is one of five Norwood brothers overseas, and the second to appear on the casualty list within a few days.

Gunner Stanley Smith, the Peterborough artilleryman, who was yesterday reported to have died of wounds, is survived by a wife and child residing on Park street. Gunner Smith is a third generation Canadian, and was born in Peterborough. His grandfather, Charles Webb, was one of Wellington's army at Waterloo and came through safely, afterwards emigrating to Canada.

Some months ago Mrs. S. McKinlay of the Fighter Wives' and Mothers' club, who has given three of her sons to the army sent a pair of socks to Pte. J. H. (Bustin Rogers), a Peterborough member of the 21st Battalion. Enclosed with the socks was a little poem. Pte. Rogers "Scottie" met death at the hands of a sniper and the socks have been returned to Mrs. McKinlay who has just received from Pte. Horace Hill, formerly of the 93rd Battalion and now in France with the 59th Canadian Battalion. Pte. Hill writes:

"Dear Friend,—Enclosed please find some poetry I have received from Pte. Rogers, who was killed in action on the 15th of September. He was in the same platoon as myself, and was a great friend of mine. He was killed by a sniper. I was with him when he was killed and I was surprised to know that it was from you, so I am mailing it to you to-night for remembrance."

The verses in question were as follows:

SOCKS OF GRAY.

What he may be, I know not; whence as duty's call he came,
What class or creed or lot is his, of high or humble name,
For when grim war's dangers are rife
in lands beyond the sea
He nobly ventures limb and life for Country, King and me.
But this I know where foe may be in battle's dread array,
Still foremost in the fight he'll be,
The lad that wears these socks of

Items of Interest "Round the Store"

This is a little synopsis of the week-end news from Elliott's store. At first it may not seem as important to you as some of the home topics, but when you consider that this little editorial may save you dollars on just the needs you can't possibly do without, it becomes very vital to you indeed.

The Ready-to-wear have for your approval to-morrow a striking and unusual value in dress skirts. For quite some time our skirt stock has been very much lower than we like to see it, but the fault is with the makers. There are so many reasons to-day that prevent them from turning goods out quickly. However, you will say these new skirts at $6.75 are distinctly new and smart and if you have not as yet got yours we would suggest you see these to-morrow as they are worth it.

Then there are so many sailors in new jaunty effects trimmed with fur just out of the millinery workrooms. The fur on these little hats is worth as much as the whole hat. The hats also each $5—and to go under them we have another lot of these trim long coated suits in serge and broadcloth at $23.50. They are indeed of excellent value. And there are cashmere gloves at 39c and at least 2,000 pairs of them in the stocking sale.

That will do Elliott's a very profitable visit to-day to-morrow.

INVENTORY OF MAN POWER OF CANADA

BANDSMAN TOM SMITH,
Peterborough member of the 93rd Band, who was one of those selected for the Canadian massed band of 250 men.

Director-General of National Service Sir Thomas Tait Announces New Policy—Badges Will Be Given

TO USE WOMEN LABOUR

OTTAWA, Oct. 12.—The conference of directors of National Service which began on Tuesday, has concluded to-day, and a statement issued by the Director-General, Sir Thomas Tait, it is announced that an inventory or census of the man-power of Canada is to be taken, and that men who offer for military service and whose service to the State as employees at home is considered of greater value will be exempted from service and will be given badges. To promote the employment of women it is proposed to organize women's national service boards in various parts of Canada. All the directors attended the conference, Dr. Abbott, of Toronto, acting as secretary.

Mr. J. S. Brierly of Montreal, who will give special attention to "women's work" under Sir Thomas Tait, also attended.

The statement follows: The negotiations respecting 'National Service' require the directors to take some measures which may be important to have all available labour utilized to the best advantage.

Inventory of Man Power.

The directorate of national service has had under careful consideration a scheme which has been formulated for taking an inventory of the man power of Canada at as early a date as possible. In this connection may be mentioned that the methods for taking the census would require too long a time and involve too large an expenditure. Therefore some new method must be devised to obtain the necessary information.

It is believed that an effective scheme for the purpose is available and that it can be given effect to within a reasonable time and at a reasonable expense. The directors are not, however, in a position as yet to make a public announcement as to the details of this scheme which are now being worked up.

In reference to the exemption of men of military age, from military service because their services in the employment in which they are then engaged are of more value to the State than if they were enlisted, the Director of National Service make the following announcement: Any man in the military age, who will offer himself to enlist and who, the director of national service for the district in which he is employed, is of more value to the State in the employment in which he is then engaged than if he were enlisted, will be exempted from enlistment subject to appeal to the Director-General.

Every such man who receives a badge and certificate and the possession of such badge will signify that he has offered to enlist, and that he has been exempted from enlistment for the reason that his services to the State are of more value to the occupation in which he is engaged than if he were enlisted. Such exemption from enlistment will continue only so long as it is considered that his services are of more value to the State in some other capacity than in the naval and military forces.

Women Labour.

In the case of a man who has enlisted after May enlist and who subsequently is considered, by the Director-General, to be of more value to the State in some other capacity than in the naval and military forces,

HUNS ARE GLAD TO SURRENDER SAYS PETERBORO' BOY

Signaller E. J. Downey of 4th Battery Gives Some Interesting News of Recent Events on Somme Front—Prisoners Going By Every Day

CAUGHT BY OWN GAS

Signaller E. J. Downey, of Peterborough, who left here with the first body of troops to depart from Peterborough for the front, the first draft from the 36th Field Battery, and who has been in France with the 4th Battery, 1st Canadian Artillery Brigade, gives some interesting details of the recent fighting on the Somme in a letter just received by his parents. Signaller Downey's wife resides at 159 Edinburgh street.

Signaller Downey says: Just a few lines to let you know that I am well, hoping this will find you all enjoying the best of health. I cannot say that I am enjoying the weather here. I think we are in for another wet and muddy winter, and believe me we have lots of mud. I saw Charlie Malone in an ambulance one day when I was coming down from the guns after taking up ammunition. I think he had two fingers taken off. I saw Cyril Lebane about a month ago, but have not seen him lately. He is in the second battalion. They made a charge here and I don't know how many men they lost, but I hear they only had a few casualties. I hope he is safe, but we can only hope for the best.

We have advanced here for quite a distance and I have just returned from a working party which was up at the new position. We had to move our guns a mile and a half forward and take it from me it was some place. It was up at the Huns' front line—that is it was his at the time, but as we wanted it of course he had to 'get out,' and he left quite a few behind that couldn't get out. We had to bury about twenty. We had two men doing nothing but picking up bodies or what were once men. In some cases there were only a few pieces. It must have been hell while it lasted.

I guess Fritz is getting about fed up with the war. One would think so the way the prisoners are coming down. They are going by every day and glad to be taken. I was talking to one of them. He could speak very good English. He told me that they put some gas over, but that it blew back over their own lines, and he sewed himself up in a small hole and putting his face in it. His clothes were yellow from the fumes and he was in pretty hard shape. He could not keep up with the rest of the prisoners, but had to rest every little while to get his breath. He said he was glad to get out of it and that his father and mother would be hungry when they heard he had been taken prisoner.

When a girl feels known up a tree at this season she can be thankful that she is not a fallen star.

CANADA FIRST.

Canada first—Canada for Canadians—is a sentiment, not inconsistent with her responsibility as a part of the Empire, nor with the fact of Canada being first in the aid she is bringing to the cause of empire in this war. There is a great shortage of news printpaper used for printing newspapers. Canada produces at present enough paper to not only supply [illegible] needs, but to permit of the importation of millions of pounds to the United States. We need have no shortage of "news print" in Canada if we only do the right thing—put Canada first. This means some arrangement for preventing the paper [illegible] from passing out of our country to foreign countries, or a foreign country, for the United States takes most of our surplus paper. They are mighty glad to get it and pay a high price for it. They are not so friendly to, in the matter of paper—independent of outside supply. But it is evident that it is the true national policy that the reserves of Canada must be for Canadians first—any overflow our neighbours are welcome to. The newspapers must impress upon Canadian manufacturers of paper that not a pound of Canadian-made "news print" is to be contracted for abroad, allowed to go out of the country till a present and reasonable future supply is assured to Canadian newspapers. We need have no paper shortage in Canada if the motto, Canada first, is honestly lived up to.

Premier Norris of Manitoba, is assuring Premier Hearst of the excellent working of prohibition in that province, and Premier Hearst is meeting him with assurances of the good working of the Act in this province. Our own Act, however, is not drink tight it leaks badly. The Ontario Temperance Act is like the proverbial sieve of parliament in that it not only [illegible] right of way to a coach and six, but lets through a brewery waggon; and later developments appear to show that the act is open enough to drive through a bonded warehouse. Each mail of bottles, chock full of [illegible] drink, is a contravention of the [illegible] and intention of the act. There is no effective in letting through the drink, were certainly not the [illegible] of the responsible framers of the act; and it is a little remarkable that, with all the words in our language, our legislators were not able to say what they meant to enact. Probably the trouble is that there are too many words; in fulfilment of the old saying, "Many words darken [illegible]." The usual legal description of an act of parliament is so plastered with verbiage that it has to be translated into practical and common sense English before it becomes understandable or is made suitable for the use of man.

However, no matter what the reason for the ambiguity and double or double-double meaning of the Prohibition Act, the fault of the government, as the party responsible for the act. The government as really and morally responsible for legislation improperly passed as it is for legislation properly passed. The act according to future interpretation spending legislation will remove all doubt. The Legislature is a curious body, and its works are curious: its works should be as curious as a child's play in enumeration that contradicts itself. There is no doubt that the spirit and sentiment of the people in favor of the effective prohibition of the liquor traffic in the supply of drink as a beverage. The government and legislature should express the will of the people in expressing explicit, plain, straightforward understandable language of the law that cannot be twisted or tortured into two meanings, or a meaning that was not meant to be crystallized into law.

LONG-SUFFERING UNCLE SAM.

The Stephano was a passenger vessel bound from a Canadian to an American port, among its passengers being forty-seven Americans, and its cargo not being contraband. The sinking of this vessel under the guns of the American fleet at the very door of the United States was a piece of impertinence that even Uncle Sam, the wildest of living men, will find is hard to be Job-like about.—Star.

AS TO NAMING BATTALIONS INSTEAD OF NUMBERING THEM

It cannot be doubted that recruiting has of late suffered considerably through the effects of the system by which the Canadian army has been raised.

It sounded well, at first, to give numbers to all the Canadian battalions—to number the battalions consecutively as the enlistment of them was authorized anywhere throughout the Dominion. As the twentieth, thirtieth, fortieth battalion was authorized the size of what Canada was doing was evidenced by the way the numbers mounted up. It sounded well; the facts spoke for themselves.

The system, however, long ago passed the point where this consideration amounts to much. The world is pretty well informed by now as to the extent of what Canada is doing. This country is on record at the outset of the present year to increase its force, of all arms of the service, to the total of 500,000 men, and some 360,000 have enlisted to date. Over 160,000 have actively engaged in the war, and upwards of 50,000 men are there now. Scores of the battalions that bore numbers between one and one hundred have been broken up, have been sent overseas, and their numbers have dropped out and disappeared. There are four Canadian divisions at the front, and these may soon be increased to five or possibly to six. Even so, more than half the battalions already authorized—many of them only partly filled—will not be utilized as units, but as reinforcements for the first four or six divisions.

Why continue, therefore, to ask men to enlist in the high numbered battalions when there is not a prospect that it will be in any such battalions that they will really serve in this war if they serve at all? Why ask men to enlist in the 350th or 404th battalion when they are really needed to reinforce the Princess Pats' or the 3rd or the 19th or some other now famous unit? To be sure the men, when they reach England, will be drafted out of the unit in which they enlisted into another in which they are needed. But by this system they are quite at sea as to what disposal will be made of them. And they do not like that. Not only so, but men who are willing to enlist do not take kindly to the idea of signing up with a high-numbered battalion. It sounds as if they had toed the mark pretty late in the war. These numbers are now becoming so high that they make one's enlistment sound and seem a good deal later in the war than it really is. The man who enlists now deserves every credit for it, because he knows he is needed and he knows what a mighty serious and real war it is that he is going into. But he does not want to tie up in the 404th Canadians. He would rather volunteer to reinforce the 4th or the 40th battalion.

It is just such considerations as these that must be taken into account if there is to be a revival in recruiting. If men, instead of being asked to enlist in the three hundred and something Highlanders, were asked next month to enlist in the Third Battalion Toronto Highlanders, or in the eighth battalion of the Torontos, or in the 20th Ontarios, they would feel that they were being "let in on the ground floor" and would be much more likely to be attracted by the invitation.

It is not too late—and it is certainly not too early—to improve the methods of numbering the Canadian battalions. The Britons would no doubt have worked admirably if but twenty or thirty battalions had been raised, and if all these had gone over in one or in two contingents. But now that so many battalions have been authorized that the numbers mount up into the hundreds, the arrangement becomes a poor one. Men clearly show a preference for joining the batteries with their low numbers, rather than the battalions with their high numbers. And numbers, anyway, are quite meaningless. Not one man in a hundred can keep track of a battalion by its number unless, his son being in it, he has a special reason for doing so. Why not adopt the use of names instead of numbers and reorganize on a new system that will take local patriotism into account? If it's recruiting that's wanted, this will be one of the surest ways of getting it. The present idea that you can send men into action fervently singing the multiplication table is not a very bright one.—Toronto Star.

NIGHTSOIL COLLECTION SYSTEM TERMINATES AT END OF YEAR

When New Measure Will Be Considered in Effort to Secure a Plan That Will Give Entire Satisfaction to the Citizens Concerned—Mr. John Carlisle's Views

That the night soil collection system now operating against more or less opposition will terminate at the end of the year, when the vexing problem of securing satisfaction with adequate service and a reasonable rate was repeated by Ald. Edgar at last night's session of the Property Committee.

Sanitary Inspector Cooper stated that the collection during September returned a financial loss to the men engaged, due to the refusal of some householders to pay the forty cents which is the present monthly charge. And as an overwhelming indictment of the by-law, Mr. John Carlisle, a prominent builder and landlord, said he could get 1,000 signatures to a protest against its continued enforcement. He had not heard one citizen speak in favour of the by-law, but had [illegible] numerous objections.

[illegible], which was attended by [illegible]sle and Mr. [illegible] which Ald. Saunders presided, illustrated in a way the advantages the City Fathers may on occasion derive from the assistance and counsel of ratepayers who have had extensive experience on particular subjects. And it may be that when the problem of night soil disposal is discussed again the Council may avail itself of advice that has all the appearance of practicability. Mr. Carlisle, for instance, [illegible] to his remarks that he [illegible] followed the Property Committee's [illegible] when [illegible] was [illegible] venture by properly equipping those houses of his which were beyond the sewer service. He welcomed the first rate of fifteen cents per month per house, but last night in retrospect referred to the annual spring "clean up" as one of the chief obstacles to the successful operation of the by-law, a condition which appears more formidable in review than it was anticipated in practice. Had the by-law been put into force later in the summer it would have operated successfully, Mr. Carlisle believed, but the contractors had been discouraged by their first heavy task which might have been expected as an accompaniment of spring.

Use of Dry Earth.

Mr. Carlisle comes naturally by his interest in public affairs, and especially in sanitary conditions. His father was Health Inspector of Peterborough years ago, and in those days he advocated the use of dry earth in closets, which Mr. Spence's by-law also required. Mr. Carlisle even traversed the ages to the two score years' sojourn of the Israelites in the desert for an early illustration of the safeguard to public health and sanitation which the use of dry earth provides.

He even declared that the city could make money by selling the night soil, treated with dry earth, as a fertiliser. Here again, Mr. [illegible] shows its vision for [illegible] director expected to use [illegible] and guarded [illegible]

BUSINESS VS. FRILLS.

The Toronto Star is disturbed over the question of naming instead of numbering Canadian battalions, and very properly so, because, according to its contention, recruiting will be promoted. And whatever will help forward recruiting will be welcomed. The Government might very well consider the matter if only as a beginning of a show of official interest in the matter of recruiting—a business it has so far neglected and left to private patriotism, necessarily inorganic and haphazard.

The slowness of recruiting and recent disappointing results are not due to parliament or the people, or altogether to the lack of spirit of the young men eligible for service. Parliament and the people have handed out "lashing" of money to the Government for war purposes and the question is how has it been employed. Leaving this question in abeyance for the moment we very well know that not enough of the freely bestowed money has been spent in placing recruiting upon a business basis, making it the business of the Government and not a by-play. The militia department has spent, and is spending money galore and much of it has unfortunately been wasted, but very little has been wasted on recruiting. We have a minister of militia, but his department is largely of late been left to the care of a deputy. Sir Sam Hughes was in the Old Country some time employed in putting things in shape in connection with the welfare and efficiency of Canadian soldiers overseas. That work could have been reasonably left to the British authorities who have some little qualifications for doing such things.

Sir Sam had better work cut out for him at home. He might have been busy at home placing recruiting on a business basis, for in his absence his colleagues were doing practically nothing in this regard. Sir Sam does things when he tries, and he might have done something to help recruiting. In this matter he has sympathized with the inaction of the Government and has failed to do what he could do if he tried. If Sir Sam took his duties as seriously as he takes himself, he would do a good deal more effective work. He sets a doubly bad example. He, not only discredits Finance Minister White's clarion call, megaphoned to the people to practice economy and thrift—to the bone—but while some poor man to help the national financial situation was taking spending or wasting some three thousand dollars by keeping a steamer chartered by the Canadian Government at $5,000 a day, waiting with steam up at Liverpool, sixteen hours, while he set the bad example in military matters of not being sharp on time—when he took steamer for home; and when he arrived sixteen hours late, he was in such a hurry that he had to have an expensive special train, at the people's expense to take him to the Capital. In face of the tremendous responsibilities of Canada in ing this war to the best effect such things seem trifling, with a stupendous duty.

When the cat's away the mice will play, as the government has been doing in the matter of recruiting in Sir Sam's absence. Now that he is back home, will he get things moving and do as much in getting recruits into uniform as he has done in getting honorary colonels into khaki? Canada and the Empire are in earnest in this war; and everything is to be subordinated to the duty of making the road to victory smooth, for the footsteps of the present urgently needed soldiers and more soldiers.

ARCANUM RATES ARE GOING UP

Advance of "Regular" Rate Will Be Steep—Mass Meeting of Members Will Be Held

Within a very short time all members of the Royal Arcanum will be notified of a revision of rates. Of course the revision will be an increase. The new rates have been worked out, and in the course of a few weeks mass meetings will be held at which full explanations will be made to the members. The new scale was adopted at a meeting of the Grand Council this month, and will go into effect on Dec. 1st. It is ten years since the last increase was made, and it was known then that another would have to be made.

Mr. Lyman Lee, of Hamilton, has charge of the legal work of the order in Canada. He explained that the order is in good condition generally. The last increase, he stated, put it on a basis of 58 per cent. solvency. "The coming increase will put it on a basis of 100 per cent. solvency, and make it absolutely safe," he added.

There are some branches of the membership which will not have to face a large advance, but what is known as the "regular" rate will be increased quite materially. Toronto Saturday Night, discussing the situation, says:

"The premium under the new ruling is fixed according to the age of the individual members, and not according to ages coming within a specified group. For this reason the older members will naturally feel the strain most heavily. Taking as a basis $3,000 benefit payable at death, a member of about fifty years of age will now pay $14.66 a month instead of $4.64 a month. The recommendations for increased rates are based upon the reports of five of the most eminent actuaries in America, and were designed to put the fraternity on a sound actuarial basis, like any life insurance company. The order has about $5,000,000 in its treasury, ample for present needs, but not sufficient to take care of future liabilities.

The increased rate was foreshadowed at a meeting of the Supreme Council last May in Atlantic City, N.J. At that time the Royal Arcanum Bulletin, reporting the proceedings of the meeting, said:

"There can be no question as to the course the order should pursue. Expedients have never proved successful, and no society can long exist that does not collect the cost of the protection it gives its members. The Royal Arcanum can't hope to attain complete solvency by periodical rate readjustments. The age of its membership a few years hence will preclude the possibility of adequate rates, and only sane thing to do now is to adopt a system of rate contributions which will at once place the order on a sound and solvent basis."

The increase will be applied to the order wherever it exists, not only in Canada.

POLICE FIGURES ON THE INCREASE

204 Arrests in Hull Since Sept. 16 —Already More For 1916 Than All Last Year

OTTAWA, Oct. 13.—Since the temperance act came into force in Ontario, on September 16, there has been 204 arrests made in Hull. Of this number, 196 were for drunkenness. Ottawa is accorded first place, with 247, all for drunkenness. Hull has produced 36. The remaining 31 are distributed among nearby Ontario towns, with an occasional one from Montreal and other eastern points.

To date, there have been 775 arrests since January 1, compared with 769 for the entire year of 1915. Of these 769, 697 were for drunkenness. Up till October 13 of last year there were 472 arrests. Sixty were arrested last year.

From September 16 of last year to October 13 there were just 48 arrests. Twenty-one of this number were arrested for drunkenness, with one lonely one from the capital.

Chief Grouix stated that from indications at present there will be 1,000 arrests this year, a new record.

"We have three months yet to cover before this time of the year, and with the number increased as it is with the present one, the last quarter will be a record breaker. I expect we will be compelled to put on another man before the year is out," he said.

NEXT WEEK OBSERVED AS EDISON WEEK

Vast Industries Based on Edison Inventions to Honour Great Inventor —$1000 Open Prize Contest Will Be a Feature—Is the Outgrowth of Edison's Preference for Untechnical Opinions of His Achievement in Music's Re-creation.

More than 1,000,000 people are employed in the various industries founded by Thomas A. Edison. In the United States alone over 600,000 men and women earn their livelihood in vocations created by Edison's genius. For a number of years a group of these industries has observed Oct. 21st, the anniversary of Mr. Edison's invention of the electric light. This year the week of October 16th-21st will be observed throughout the United States and Canada as Edison Week. The light and power companies will manifest their recognition of the fact that Mr. Edison is the founder of their industry, and thousands of other men and women who make their living by virtue of Edison's inventions will play their part in this unusual demonstration.

Among the many things planned for the celebration of Edison Week is a $1,000 Prize Contest arranged by associates of the inventor. This contest had its origin in a remark which Mr. Edison made last spring to one of his assistants.

Music is Mr. Edison's hobby. His intimates and associates are aware that of the thousand or more inventions which he has developed, the phonograph is his favourite. He has always contended that there is no reason why a phonograph could not be made which would reproduce musical sounds so perfectly that the mechanical reproduction would be exactly like the original music, in fact, so exactly like it as to be indistinguishable from the original. For years Mr. Edison has stated that, when he got time he would develop such a phonograph. Scientists generally scoffed at this idea, and even his own Laboratory assitants, with the exception of two or three who have been with Mr. Edison so long that they believe nothing is impossible, were inclined to think that the perfect phonograph was a thing that could never be.

Several years ago, having completed his work on the storage battery, Mr. Edison decided that he would try to develop a means of recording and reproducing sound which would make the reproduction indistinguishable from the original. It proved to be the biggest and most costly research work ever undertaken by Mr. Edison. He spent nearly $3,000,000 in experiments alone, and these experiments were not completed until March of this year. When the new invention and new record were perfected, Mr. Edison said, "Now we shall find out what we have. Rent Carnegie Hall, New York City, and get Madame Rappold of the Metropolitan Opera to go over there. Have her stand beside the new phonograph and sing in actual comparison with our records of her voice. Invite the music critics and the music lovers of New York City. Get the most critical audience you can possibly get. If I have succeeded in doing what I set out to do, they won't be able to tell Madame Rappold's voice from the phonograph's reproduction of her voice."

While Mr. Edison's associates believed that he had produced a wonderful invention, they doubted whether in a place like Carnegie Hall, before an audience of critical musicians, it would sustain the acid test of a direct comparison of this kind.

The test was made on April 28th, before an audience of 2,500 people, and just as Mr. Edison had prophesied, it proved impossible to distinguish Madame Rappold's voice from Edison's reproduction of it. Next day the New York papers were enthusiastic in their praise of Edison's new invention. The New York Tribune said: "Edison has spared the soul of music." The Globe referred to it as "the phonograph with a soul." One writer stated that Edison had developed a new art—Music's Re-Creation.

Similar tests were made with other artists in Boston, Philadelphia and elsewhere, and with the same result. One of Mr. Edison's associates collected all of the newspaper reviews and found that the music critics of more than 200 newspapers had testified to the fact that Mr. Edison's so-called Re-Creation of Music could not be distinguished from the original music. These newspaper reviews were neatly pasted in a scrap book, and shown to the inventor. He glanced through the scrap book and then remarked: "The opinions of these experts prove that we have accomplished what we set out to accomplish, but somehow or other the opinion of a layman is always more interesting to me than the opinion of an expert. When I complete an invention I like to know what the man in the street thinks of it and how he thinks it is going to benefit him."

Mr. Edison's associates remembering this remark decided to get the opinions of non-expert and non-technical people. Without Mr. Edison's knowledge they arranged through the J. M. Greene Music Co. of this city, and merchants of several other cities, to place a number of these new instruments in various homes and get the untechnical opinions of typical, American and Canadian families.

To stimulate interest in the matter $1,600 in prizes are offered for the best opinions. This contest occurs during Edison Week. The first prize is $500, the second $200, and the third $100. Then there is a Consolation Contest with prizes aggregating $200. It is proposed to print the prize winning opinions in a booklet and present to to Mr. Edison as a souvenir of Edison Week. Opinions which do not win prizes, but which are nevertheless considered worthy of publication, will be purchased at 10 cents per word. No opinion is to exceed 200 words in length. Literary excellence will not be considered. Professional writers and all persons connected with the phonograph industry are barred from the competition, as it is desired to obtain only untechnical opinions.

MUSIC'S RE-CREATION—what is it?

Music's Re-Creation is Thomas A. Edison's new art. The word Re-Creation was adopted by America's leading music critics to distinguish from talking machines the perfect musical result accomplished by Mr. Edison's new invention

The NEW EDISON

We want you to hear examples of this new art. Come to our store, and let us play literal Re-Creations of the world's great singers and instrumentalists.

Zenatello has recently been knighted by the King of Italy

"A voice of golden tone, prodigal in its expenditure, yet responsive to every emotional shade." This great Italian tenor's voice has just been Re-Created by Edison's wonderful new art. In this picture you see the great Zenatello actually singing in direct comparison with Edison's Re-Creation of his voice, and proving conclusively that his living voice and Edison's Re-Creation of it are indistinguishable. Zenatello is one of the many great artists who have similarly proved the absolute perfection of Edison's new invention. Hear Edison's Re-Creation of Zenatello's voice and then hear Zenatello himself when you have the opportunity.

CAUSE OF FIRE WAS INVESTIGATED

Fire Chief Howard sitting as a coroner by the authority of the Attorney-General of Ontario, to-day conducted an investigation respecting a fire that took place on September 20th at the home of Mrs. Charlotte Irvine, 281 Park street. The investigation which was held in the Police Court Chambers, commenced at two o'clock this afternoon and lasted for nearly an hour, after which the court was adjourned pending further instructions from the Attorney-General.

A number of witnesses were heard all of whom testified that the fire originated from the chimney, and was not of incendiary origin. Maxwell Irvine said that he heard one of the neighbour's boys say that someone set fire to the woodshed with coal oil and matches. This the witness denied.

184 Complaints in Four Months Against Garbage Collection

One hundred and eighty-four complaints against the garbage collection have been registered with Sanitary Inspector Cooper during his fourth months in that position. The causes of these minor troubles are varied as follows: Neglect of householders to put out their containers early enough, new men engaged by the contractor to make collections overlooking some places while they are learning the routes, putting them out on the wrong days and so on. For the most part the complaints have been of a trivial nature and due more to misunderstandings than to neglect.

Cressman, who leaves shortly for overseas service in the flying corps, as their guest. During the course of the evening speeches were made by several of those present, expressing regret at the departure of Mr. Cressman, who was greatly esteemed by the employees of the company. In conclusion he was presented with a wrist watch and the evening terminated with "He's a Jolly Good Fellow" and "God Save the King."

Mr. Cressman is extremely popular with the staff, and carries with him their best wishes and a sincere desire for his safe return.

Mr. Cressman sails some time next week for England for service with the Royal Naval Air Service.

DO YOU KNOW THE ADDRESS OF CANADIANS LIVING IN MICHIGAN?

How You Can Help the Allies' Cause by Telephoning Mr. Felix Brownscombe—Big Bazaar is Being Arranged in Detroit to Help Destitute in Countries of Allies.

Peterborough people who know the names and addresses of any Canadians in the city of Detroit or the State of Michigan generally can help the cause of the Allies by telephoning the information to Mr. Felix Brownscombe. The data is needed by the Canadian Division of the Charity Exposition and Bazaar to be held for the benefit of the widows and orphans of the soldiers of the war, under the auspices of the Allied Relief Committee. The matter is explained in the following letter received by Mr. Brownscombe from Mr. J. A. Burnett, chairman of the Canadian division:

Detroit, Mich.

Dear Sir,—With the continued sufferings of the European war, the increased suffering and destitution of the widows of widows and orphans, have touched the various societies and branches of the allied countries in Detroit to combine for the purpose of giving a grand charity bazaar for their relief, which will be held at the new Tabernacle, Grindley Field, Detroit, Mich.

The bazaar will be represented by all the Allied nations participating in this great conflict, and the committee appointed to represent the Canadian division is desirous of obtaining the names and addresses of all Canadians now resident in the State of Michigan, with a view of interesting them in the work which is being promulgated for the alleviation of the suffering in the countries of the Allies.

The worthy object of this charity need not be further dwelt upon, and all Canadians are no doubt eager to assist in this humane endeavour, if not in the way of donations, by giving it at least their moral support.

I would appreciate it if you will, as a brother curler and brother helper, forward to me at your earliest convenience a complete a list as possible of former residents of your city now located in this State, in order that we may communicate with them.

Thanking you in anticipation, I am, Yours very truly,

J. A. Burnett.

Was Found Having Liquor in His Hotel at Lakefield—How Inspector Stewart Ferreted Out Hidden Bottle

A. G. Lawless, proprietor of the Lakefield House, Lakefield, was fined $200 and costs by Magistrate Langley in the County Police Court held in Peterborough this morning, after pleading guilty to a charge of having liquor in his hotel on Friday, October 6th. The charge was undefended, and remained for the Magistrate to impose the minimum fine. This is the first conviction in this district under the new Ontario Temperance Act of 9 hotel-keepers.

Inspector Stewart of the Provincial Police visited the Lakefield House last Friday and the outlook was all right. Everything looked clean and orderly, and the proprietor was in sight but the inspector was not satisfied. He went behind the bar and looked around, but found nothing. Then he noticed that the remaining liquor was under the counter. It was found that a bottle of Dewar's White Label Scotch whisky had been hidden away, but its hiding place was discovered. Mr. Stewart noticed that it was a little more than half empty, and

FIREMEN TENDER THEIR SYMPATHY ALSO THANK FLAVELLE'S LIMITED

Lindsay Still Has Hopes of Retaining the Fire Swept Industry of Flavelle's Limited—A Tribute to Lindsay's Zealous Fire Chief

LINDSAY, Oct. 13.—The Fire Department has handed in the following with the request that it be published:

"Fire Chief Bell feels it incumbent upon him to acknowledge through the press the splendid generosity of the Flavelles Limited firm who, in a quiet way, have disbursed through Chief Bell the handsome sum of over $300, commending the firemen and others, who so ably assisted them in fighting their fire at their cold storage plant.

This is, he states, a distinct contrast to the way others in Lindsay have given proof of their appreciation of the hard work and exposure to life and limb in fighting the fires which have occurred during the past several years."

To Flavelles Firm.

The firm of Flavelles Ltd. is in receipt of the following:

Lindsay, Ont., Oct. 12th, 1916.

To Flavelles Limited:—

Gentlemen,—We, the members of the Lindsay Fire Brigade, beg to tender you our sincere sympathy in your recent loss by fire, coming as it did at your very busy season.

The loss of this valuable plant that has so long proved a boon to the community and which was a result of many years of incessant work and labours on your part in raising it to a standard, second to none in the country, is to be deplored.

On the eventful morning as the news spread abroad, citizens paled and were filled with emotion at the thought that one of our greatest and best industries was threatened with destruction by that dreadful element which invariably spreads destruction in its path.

The firemen, ever responsive to their call of duty, hurried to the scene in the grey and early morn, and under the directions of their zealous Chief, endeavoured to cope with the rapidly spreading flames. Not for one moment did we shirk our duty to save the valuable industry, every man doing his utmost during the time.

We highly appreciate the assistance rendered us by the heads of the firm of Flavelles Limited and also the manner in which our wants were supplied during the trying time.

In conclusion we wish to tender our thanks for the beneficient monetary consideration and sincerely trust that Phoenix-like a new building will arise from the ashes, greater and grander than ever.

(Sgd.) JAMES BELL,

rector of national service, to be of more value to the State in the occupation in which he was engaged previous to his enlistment than in the military forces, such man will be released from the military forces, so that he may resume the previous occupation in which his services are considered to be of more value to the State.

The subject of the better utilization of women labour was thoroughly discussed and it was the sense of the directorate that the temporary substitution of women for men in industrial and other occupations and the more general employment of women in industrial life would help to maintain national production and promote financial stability. It would also, by supplying additional labour, where necessary, and by making possible the release of men for work which only men can do, help in the recruiting of the military and naval forces, and in the maintenance of industries vital to the State. It was therefore decided that measures should be taken to encourage women to offer their service in all industrial and other occupations suitable to their capacities, and, when opportune to induce employers to take the utmost advantage of such offers. To carry out the policy so outlined, it was decided that as soon as the necessary preliminaries could be arranged, the directors should proceed with the organization, in all parts of the Dominion, of committees of women, to be known as Women's National Service Boards.

Registration of Female Labour.

The duty of these boards is to be the registration of women labour, the securing where possible of the employment, locally, of such labour and the performance of other work incidental to such duties. Where considered desirable, advisory committees composed of prominent employers and others to be created to co-operate with the boards, especially with regard to securing employment for such labour as may be offered. The directors will also be expected to assist as far as possible in promoting equilibrium between demand and supply of women labour.

Confidence was expressed that employers will loyally assist in promoting the object which the directors of national service have in view, in stimulating women to offer for work, which they have not heretofore been called on to perform, once the need for such co-operation is understood, and the existence of the supply of women labour is in evidence. A number of other matters were discussed, and considered by the directors some of which may, later on, lead to an extension or further development of "national service."

Under the regulations, the supervision of recruiting and the co-ordination of all agencies, civil and military, connected with recruiting, rest with the district recruiting officer, under control of the military headquarters at Ottawa.

It is understood that in taking the steps among the method adopted will be similar to that already in use in connection with [illegible]

Tenders For Garbage Collection Will Be Called Soon

The Property committee of the Council decided last night to call for tenders for garbage collection at an early date in order that the details of the 1917 work may be completely planned before the first of the year when the new contract will become effective. Mr. Graham, the present contractor, expected to tender for next year's work and in the meantime is purchasing an additional team and waggon.

If Mr. V. J. McElderry can effect an arrangement with the garbage collector to call at his residence on Monaghan road at the end of Waller street, the committee will have no objection to make, but the members could not promise that the city's system would be applied to a single residence as in Mr. McElderry's case.

Market Clerk Moloney asked for some compensation covering loss of business while the market scales were being readjusted and repaired. Chairman Saunders was instructed to get further information from the market clerk regarding the amount of business lost and the Council's liability, if any, therein.

A Garbage Complaint.

Mr. G. W. Hatton complained that the ashes from his office had not been collected in over a week.

Ald. Duncan—"Perhaps they're wood ashes and wouldn't take them."

Sanitary Inspector Cooper reported that he had attended to this case and that Collector Graham informed him that ashes had not been collected for a long time.

Ald. Duncan remarked that some complaints had come to him of wood ashes being left and that coal ashes got the preference because the collector could sell them.

Mr. Cooper explained that all [illegible]

THE CLOSED DOORS OF LOUVAIN

BY A CANADIAN OVERSEAS

German arrogance, unmitigated by humour, still thrives. They continue to believe themselves the selfless benefactors of the human race and they never tire of telling us how they carry the blessings of civilization wherever they go and above all how they have lavished upon Belgium this care and attention.

For two years now Belgium has been aware of this unsolicited attention. For two years the Germans have endeavoured to bring the Belgians under the yoke of Prussia. They have burned churches and libraries, and they have murdered and pillaged; yet these Belgium people refuse to speak a single word of gratitude.

The Germans, as if to show the natural kindness of their hearts, are endeavouring to bring back their reluctant foe within the fold of reason. They are employing all their ingenuity and eloquence to explain to them their folly and wickedness and convince them that whatever they have suffered they have brought upon themselves. The Germans announce that they did no more than follow the law of nature — the law of "German nature" they should have said. And as for the atrocities they were all the fault of the Belgian — "Franco-tireurs"; besides, it is the fortune of war.

With characteristic impudence, Dr. Krehs of the Freiburg University, contrasts the narrow spirit of the Belgians with the "loyalty" of the German clergy, which, "with the patience of angels, has avoided open conflict in God's sanctuary," and sings a hymn of praise to the generosity of the German government because it has not interned or imprisoned Cardinal Mercier or his colleagues. Were he not a German we might easily believe the pitiful professor to be mad.

What most deeply stirs the anger of Dr. Krehs is the persistent refusal of Cardinal Mercier to re-open the University of Louvain. This extraordinary German assures us that some at least of the buildings are there spared by accident and scattered up and down the ancient city. The students are there too, at least such of them as have escaped the fire and sword of Germany. Yet Cardinal Mercier will not open the closed door — such obstinancy German pedants cannot understand.

Other things are beyond the realm of their comprehension, too. They cannot understand honourable indignation and human dignity. So long as the German barbarians clog the soil of Belgium, the doors of Louvain will remain barred. Their pride is wholly creditable to them. Their priceless library has wantonly and barbarously been burned before their eyes. Their books and manuscripts, the work of centuries, reduced to ashes merely to glut the ferocity of the invading beast.

Dr. Krehs declares that "the main building with the precious library was fired from flying sparks." Rather was it a deliberate attack upon a learning which was not German; upon a humanity which knew nothing of the savage policy of Attila and his Huns.

The crime committed the Germans proceed to throw the blame upon the poor victims of their outrage. It was Louvain's own fault," says the unspeakable Krehs, "that she has lost her manuscripts. We in Germany find it hard to understand why the rarities of the library were not stored in fire-proof places," when the war like a wind of fire, drew near the city. "We in Freiburg took care to have the "unicums" of the municipal art collection put in safety, although the war was far from being near our doors as the doors of Louvain."

But how should Louvain know that Germany was mad with the mania of destruction, that her zeal for learning was a sham or a pretence? Nothing is more sadly pathetic than the belief of Belgium, in the earlier days of the war, that the Germans would fight like civilized gentlemen. Moreover it was a simple matter for Freiburg to put her "unicums" away where she pleased. The war did not come upon her like a thief in the night. She had due warning of her country's plot against the peace of Europe.

Characteristically after throwing the weight of the blame upon Louvain, Dr. Krehs proceeds to belittle its loss. The "unicums" it is true, are destroyed, but "the real working library of Louvain," according to a German expert, "can be replaced for a 100,000 marks, in a far better condition than it ever was before." There the German mind is revealed in all its naked vulgarity. It cares not for the zealous collector and the pious donor. It believes that a mere 100,000 of Germany's depreciated marks may in a single day do the work of centuries and it proves what fools were they who believed that the spirit of true learning lived and breathed on the other side of the Rhine.

All this is valuable to us now, because we know what sort of men we have been pilloried in Belgium from. The more we know of them the better shall we be able to understand their cunning and their falsehood. They have been pilloried in Belgium from the beginning as monsters of cruelty and stupidity, and it is too late for them to underate the harm they have done.

What Thin Folks Should Do To Gain Weight

Good Advice For Thin, Undeveloped Men and Women.

Thousands of people suffer from excessive thinness, weak nerves and feeble stomachs who, having tried advertised flesh-makers, food-fads, physical culture stunts and rub-on creams, restore themselves to life-long plumpness and think nothing will make them fat. Yet their case is not hopeless. A recently discovered combination of assimilative agents has made fat grow after years of thinness, and it is also unequalled, judging from reports, for repairing the waste of sickness or faulty digestion and for strengthening the nerves. This remarkable preparation is called Sargol. Its strength-giving, fat-producing assimilative elements of acknowledged merit have been combined in this preparation, which is endorsed and used by prominent people everywhere. It is absolutely harmless, inexpensive and efficient.

A few weeks systematic use of Sargol should go far to produce flesh and strength by correcting faults of digestion and by supplying nourishing fats to the blood. If not, every druggist who sells it is authorized to return the purchase price. Increased nourishment is obtained from the food eaten, and the additional fats that thin people need are thus provided. All leading druggists supply Sargol and they say there is a large demand for it.

If you find druggist who is unable to supply you with Sargol, send $1.00 money order or registered letter to the National Laboratories, 74 St. Antoine street, Montreal and a complete 60m days' treatment will be sent you postpaid in a plain wrapper.

While this new preparation has from reports given splendid results as a nerve tonic and vitalizer, its use is not recommended to nervous people unless they wish to gain at least ten pounds of flesh.

Gift of Food Is Acknowledged

Mr. C. F. Leonard the American Consul has received the following card from No. 106128, Lance Corp. Ralph A. Candler a member of the 1st Canadian Mounted Rifles who is a prisoner of war at Dulmen, Germany. Mr. Stratford is at a loss to know how Lance Corp. Candler should have addressed the communication to it did but thinks that the acknowledgment of the receipt of food from Peterborough should be made public. The card which is addressed, The American Consul, Peterborough, Ont., reads as follows:—

Many thanks for the parcel of food which the citizens of Peterborough so kindly sent. The parcel arrived in good condition and was greatly appreciated when received. We are very hungry.

Will Investigate Method

Mr. George Ball drew the attention of the Property committee of the Council last night to a new system of manufacturing fuel from a city's garbage. Regina, San Antonio, Los Angeles and some other municipalities, all but Regina being in the United States, are operating or putting into operation, this system. The combustible material obtained via garbage are mixed with wood flour and compressed into logs which, selling at a considerable profit to the municipality. Mr. Ball said he would not agitate for the system of the committee, but Ald. Bright pointed out that by San Francisco has, without 24 hours notice, regarding it.

How To Make A Good Hair Tonic at Home

If you have been using hair tonics purchased ready-made at the drug stores you can probably save some money and get a great deal better results by using the following recipe which has been repeatedly successful in stopping loss of hair and making new hair grow on bald and thin spots. Anyone can easily make it at home. Simply mix 6 oz. of Lavona De Compose with 6 oz. of pure Bay Rum and then add one half drachm of menthol crystals and a little perfume if desired. The preparation should be well shaken and then allowed to stand a few hours before using. All these ingredients can be obtained from any well-stocked drug store. In applying be sure to not merely wet the hair but rub the tonic right into the scalp as by adding to your new hair depends entirely upon the stimulation being given to the hair roots. This preparation has been used for years and is entirely harmless. Any one can make the hair tonic and all say it makes the hair luxuriant and beautiful. Ladies should be careful not to get any of the tonic on their dress as it will take the color out.

Safe in Port

BOSTON, Oct. 13.—The British steamer Kingstonian, reported as among those torpedoed by a German submarine off Nantucket last Sunday, is safe in port, according to word received by John M. Thomas of this city, local manager of the Leyland Line, which owns the steamer. Mr. Thomas said his information showed that the Kingstonian was thousands of miles from Nantucket last Sunday.

As the Kingstonian is in the service of the British Admiralty, Mr. Thomas was not permitted to indicate the port at which she had arrived, but he said that it would take her two weeks of steaming at her usual speed to reach Nantucket, so that it was guidess she was nowhere near the scene of the submarine's operations in those waters last Sunday.

British Capture Enemy Trenches

Special to The Examiner:

LONDON, Oct. 13.—Pushing their patrols eastward from the towns of Prosenik and Topolova, captured from the Bulgars a few days ago, the British reconnoitred along the railway to the junction of the Seres-Demirhissar and Seres - Salonika roads. The Bulgars are holding the railway in considerable forces. On the Lake Dolran front, enemy trenches north of Doldseli were captured by the British.

42,620 People Saw Red Sox Win World's Championship Yesterday

For the Second Time Bill Carrigan's American Leaguers Annex Title For Second Year in Succession—Shore Held Dodgers to Three Hits, One a Scratch and Their Only Score Was the Result of a Passed Ball.

Second game—Boston 2, Brooklyn, 1.

Third game—Brooklyn 4, Boston 3.

Fifth game—Boston 4, Brooklyn 1.

The Official Figures.

Attendance, 42,620; receipts $83,-[illegible] Each Club's share, $27,742.85. National Commission's share, $8,-[illegible]

Braves' Field, Boston, Mass. Oct. [illegible] the greatest crowd that ever witnessed a professional baseball game, the Boston Red Sox annexed their fourth world's championship this afternoon. A vast throng, numbering 42,620 wild-eyed fans, saw the last down the Brooklyn Dodgers, [illegible] one, in the fifth game of the [illegible] tussle.

[illegible] the Sox fourth victory, [illegible] retired the title for them. To [illegible], elongated right hander [illegible], went the honours of stowing away the championship. He is the only pitcher to be credited with [illegible] in the series.

Richest In History.

The title clash, in addition to furnishing the longest world's championship game on record in the four-game [illegible] tussle here Monday, was also one of the richest in history. The receipts for to-day's game alone were $83,673, and the total receipts for the five games were $395,800.50. Of this amount each club received $92,092.02 as its share. The National Commission reaped a total of $49,-559.05. The players' share was $33,-927.45. Sixty per cent. of this goes to Boston and 40 per cent. to Brooklyn, to be divided among the players eligible for the series in such manner as the players themselves see fit.

To-day's ball game did not measure up to the crowd. At times, ordinary, and in some places it was weird. The great crowd really didn't turn itself loose until the game was over. Thousands then flooded down on the diamond in the wake of the band, which loudly tooted "Tessie," and after marching around the field, massed in front of the players' bench to shout itself out.

Every available bit of ground inside the Braves' field was packed. Even in the runaways leading to the bleachers hundreds stood, pushing and jostling in an effort to see the players. There was not a vacant spot in the immense grandstand, in the bleachers. Under the bright sun a chill that was in the air passed somewhat during the afternoon, but overcoats for the male fans and furs for the women were in order.

To win his game, Shore turned in one of the best games he has pitched all year. The Yank of the Dodgers' hits was only three, and one of these was an infield single that, perfectly played, would have been a put-out. It was credited to Chief Meyers, one of the slowest runners in baseball.

Olsen's Costly Errors.

Larry Gardner, slugger of the [illegible], got his vault hand into the [illegible] Red Sox run. Although [illegible] tripled in the second, [illegible] a fly to Wheat and [illegible] the catch. Bran [illegible] been cowed all through the series up to Saturday, [illegible] also one of the richest in history. Bran [illegible] been cowed all through the series up to Saturday, [illegible] ery at critical moments, did some of his bolting in the third with will mainly responsible for two more runs. Cady had singled and taken second when Hooper was passed. Janvrin hit to Olsen, who after juggling the ball and allowing Hooper to reach second, threw past Cutshaw into centre field and Cady counted. Hooper reached third. It was scored as two errors against Olsen. When Shorten singled Hoope scored.

The final Boston run was the result of a single by Hooper and a double by Janvrin in the fifth.

Brooklyn's Only Run.

The only Dodger run came in the second, and not a hit helped it across. Cutshaw started with a walk, went to second on Mowrey's sacrifice, took third on Olsen's out, and scored when Cady allowed one of Shore's shoots to pass him.

Jeff Pfeffer's pitching was not bad. It was good enough to win an average game, but the Dodger miscues were too much for him to overcome.

Everett Scott, the youthful Boston shortstop, made his only two errors of the series in this final game. Each of them allowed a man to reach first, but resulted in no further damage.

Wheat and Lewis, the rival left fielders, turned in sparkling catches and helped to enliven an almost colorless contest. In the eighth inning, when Fred Merkle was sent in to hit for Pfeffer, the former Giant, who smashed one into left that looked like a sure single, Lewis dashed in at top speed, bent almost to the ground and scooped the ball almost off the grass.

Wheat's catch was even more sensation. It was in the fifth inning and robbed Shore of a hit. He had to run far into centre field to duplicate Lewis' catch.

Janvrin and Lewis were credited with the only extra base hits of the game. Lewis tripled in the second, and Janvrin doubled in the fifth.

very satisfactory. Four thousand men are being asked for, and no trouble is anticipated in getting the allotment. Many inquiries also are being received direct at Ottawa.

Winnipeg, Oct. 12. — Official announcement was received here from the record office that Lieut.-Col. Robert McDonnell Thomson had died of wounds, received on active service. Colonel Thomson came to Winnipeg thirty years ago from Walkerton, Ont., and was senior member of the law firm of Thomson, Jameson and McWilliams, a firm which has lost three of its four principals in battle, Col. Thomson, Capt. G. W. Jameson and Capt. John Geddes.

Col. Thomson saw considerable service in the Riel Rebellion and in 1910 took initial steps in organizing the 79th Cameron Highlanders here. He had recently offered his residence here to the Government as a convalescent house for soldiers.

The Havelock Standard says: Mrs. Jos. Kiernan received a telegram on Thursday last stating that her husband, Pte. Kiernan, had been wounded in the arm from the effects of shrapnel.

The telegram was followed by a [illegible] from Pte. Kiernan's chum [illegible] that Pte. Kiernan's wife had also been wounded, namely that Pte. Kiernan's wife got serious and that he expected to be able to report for duty in a short time, probably about the time she received the letter. They were both victims of the same shell and had been in the thick of the recent hot engagements on the front on September 19th last.

Pte. Robert Glover, of Peterborough, now overseas with the 208th Battalion, says: "I am in the pink of health and greatly in love with England. I made a great sacrifice when I separated from you and my family, but I will never regret it. If the young and middle-aged men of Canada only knew what a mother country we have they would sling their civilian clothes to the winds and say, 'We will die for her.'"

Bowlers' Banquet At Season's End and Present Silver Prizes

Also Report a Deficit of $210 at Beginning of the Year Transformed into a Credit Balance of $48—The Toast List

Peterborough bowlers closed a very successful season with a banquet last night at the Empress Hotel, at which twenty-five members were present. The dinner was splendidly arranged and served, and was thoroughly enjoyed. A short toast list followed, with the President, Mr. T. C. Elliott, presiding as toastmaster.

The first toast was "The King and All He Represents," which was enthusiastically honoured.

Followed "The Winning Rinks," to which reply was made by Mr. F. J. Voades, Dr. Hammond, and Mr. Dave Moore.

"The Bowling Green Committee" drew responses from Mr. John Read and Mr. Tom Brightman.

"The New Members" had coupled to it the names of Mr. Budd, Mr. Parkins and Mr. Wrenn, who spoke of the season's games and the Peterborough Club.

Good Financing.

The financial statement showed a credit balance of $48.00, with a few minor accounts outstanding. When it is considered that the year opened with a deficit of $210.00, the Executive surely have earned for themselves a niche in the gallery of high financiers.

Prizes Presented.

One of the features of the evening, not the only one, was the presentation of the prizes. They were all of silverware, including sugar and cream sets, gold-lined berry spoons and sugar shells, bon-bon dishes, and carving knives and forks. Among the winners were: Dr. Hammond and Messrs. George Cairns, Tom Pratt, John Maynard, Tom Brightman, Robert Elliott, John Wyllie, Ed. Taylor, Budd, Wrenn, and Parkins.

During the discussion of next year's plans it was suggested that a plan might be devised by which prizes might be given from the district, and that tournaments be held in each of the district towns at two weeks' intervals. In this district there are the following clubs: Oshawa, Bowmanville, Cobourg, Port Hope, Millbrook, Lindsay, and Peterborough. It was felt that this would draw the clubs more closely together, provide better sport and weld the district into a compact group.

PTE. FROST'S FUNERAL.

Mr. John Frost, 504 Albert street has received the following letter from Chaplain Capt. D. Oliver in connection with the death of his son Pte. Thomas Frost, 93rd Battalion.

Moore Barrack Hospital
Shorncliffe, Kent,
Sept. 26, 1918

Dear Sir,—Before this reaches you you will have heard officially about the death of your son, Thomas Frost at Moore Barrack Hospital, Shorncliffe.

He entered the hospital just one week before his death and from the beginning he was very ill. In fact, very little hope of his recovery was held by the Medical Board. After the first twenty-four hours he was unconscious most of the time and he peacefully passed away on Friday morning September 22nd.

He was buried yesterday in the Canadian part of the Garrison church cemetery, Shorncliffe. He had a military funeral. The band belonging to his battalion played and the body was placed on a gun carriage with six horses attached. There was a firing party. Many of his chums, followed his remains to the cemetery and I read the burial service.

His grave is marked by a wooden cross with his number and name and the name of his battalion on it. The cemetery is a beautiful spot, and it is understood that after the war a monument will be erected by the Canadian Government with all the names of our Canadian boys who have died in the Shorncliffe district inscribed upon it.

I extend to you and to his mother, wife and little children my sincere sympathy in your sorrow. He was a good boy and we learned to love him for his worth. And our prayer to God is that he may sustain you all in your great bereavement.

Yours sincerely,
D. OLIVER.

Your other son Arthur was present at the funeral and intended leaving for France to-day. After the funeral he had tea with me yesterday.

The Kingston Standard Says:

It has been decided by the Militia authorities at Ottawa to establish a series of base battalions instead of the regular battalions as previously organized. A base battalion with headquarters at Kingston has been decided upon with a company in this city; one at Belleville; one at Brockville and one at Cornwall; making four companies. The band of the 155th battalion, now in camp will be retained for the use and service of the new base battalion with headquarters in Kingston. It is understood that the organization of a base battalion will not interfere with the intention of the department to organize in the various counties.

Pte. R. E. Wilson of Kingston who is reported killed in action is well known in Peterborough having been employed with the Matthews Blackwell Company. The Kingston Standard Says:

The sad intelligence of the death of her son, Pte R. E. Wilson, was received yesterday by his mother Mrs. Robert Wilson, of 26 Clergy street west. The message stated that Private Wilson had been killed in action between September 15th and 17th. He was a member of the 21st Battalion, and while in this city worked at Largee's quarry while previously he was employed with the Matthews-Blackwell Company, of Peterborough. He was single and 25 years of age, being his mother's oldest son. His fatal wounds were the third he received, he having been wounded last January he having been wounded last January he having been wounded last January. Basil, also serving in the 21st Battalion.

CAMP BORDEN, Ont., Oct. 13.—Lieut. Gen. Sir Sam Hughes, Minister of Militia, accompanied by staff officers, arrived at 10.30 a.m. on his second visit to Camp Borden. The Minister looked in fine health as he shook hands with numerous civilian friends who had come to camp to [illegible] him. He inspected the guard and was rushed off to headquarters by Maj. Gen. Logie and Col. H. C. Bickford.

Before Sir Sam had arrived, however the mammoth ceremonial review, which had been arranged, was called off. Up till noon to-day Sir Sam was in conference at headquarters with all headquarters officers and will make a tour of the camp this afternoon.

WEDDING BELLS

MOORE—BELL.

A very pretty wedding was solemnized on Wednesday, Oct. 11, at the home of Thos Bell of Selwyn, when his only daughter, Ethel Herbertina, was united in marriage to Norman Allan Moore of Lakefield. Rev. J. G. McKee, B.A., of Bridgenorth, officiated.

The bride who was given away by her father, looked charming in a beautiful gown of white satin, with the conventional veil and wreath of lilies of the valley, and a corsage bouquet of white roses.

After the wedding luncheon the happy couple motored away amid cheers and good wishes to Port Hope where they were to take the train for points west.

Dear Sir,—I would like to draw some people's attention to the number of dogs that is running around the streets. Last night about twelve o'clock it was something awful. At the corner of Stewart and Townsend Streets, there were about twelve dogs and the noise was more than any guns that the Germans ever had.

I think that if the police were to take a walk around Stewart and Townsend Streets, they would find a few dogs that are minus the tag. I think there should be an "early closing law for dogs instead of stores, so that people can get about forty winks of sleep after a day's work is done.

Thanking you for your valuable space.

SACRIFICE IN X-RAY ROOM WINS RIBBON.

PARIS, Oct. 12.—Dr. Menard, of the Cochin Hospital, was decorated with the Legion of Honour as a recompense for his loss of two fingers by exposure to the X-ray in hospital work.

Dr. Menard, who has lost a finger from each hand, has accomplished admirable results in the location of projectiles in the bodies of wounded soldiers. The loss of his first finger did not deter Dr. Menard from following up his research work in the radiographic room. Tissue cells exposed frequently to the X-rays are liable to malnutrition.

Through Dr. Menard's experiments at the Cochin Hospital a surgeon there was able a few days ago to locate and extract in ten minutes a shrapnel bullet lodged under the heart of a wounded soldier.

ENTHUSIASM WAS KEYNOTE AT LONDON

Speaking of the convention of Liberal Clubs of Ontario in London on Wednesday night, Mr. G. A. Gillespie, M.P.P., stated that he had been greatly impressed by the deep enthusiasm that moved the meetings, especially the banquet, addressed by Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Mr. Rowell, and Premier Norris, Manitoba. There was a strong desire that the war be pressed on to the peace which is beginning to appear, and that Canada then turn to the problems of peace with a larger and broader vision directed to the country's needs and aspirations. It was stated that there wasn't a constituency that was not represented by two or more residents. There were 1,600 persons in Hyman Hall, one of the banquets, and hundreds were turned away.

Lord Robert Cecil, Discussing Atlantic Submarine Situation, Makes Significant Statement About the Deutschland and Her Cargo—Organized Outrages Against U.S. and Canada—Refers to the Sub. Raid Off the Atlantic Coast, and Whole Hun Foreign Policy as Plain Blackmail.

LONDON, October 16.—The operations of the German submarine boat U-53 off the American coast, raises no new issues, as far as the British government is concerned, in the opinion of Lord Robert Cecil, minister of war trade, who discussed with the Canadian Press the latest developments in the relations between Great Britain and the United States. Lord Robert declares that this form of warfare on merchantment violated international law as it was recognized by Great Britain and the United States in the days before the war, and was still objectionable to Great Britain, but no more so than when it is done on this side of the water.

Referring to reports of meetings between Sir Richard Crawford, commercial attache of the British embassy at Washington, with American bankers and Business men, Lord Robert said no departure in principle had been made from the British blockade measures, but it could be safely said that the general policy leaned in the direction of a modification rather than an extension of the blacklist.

TREATIES BECOME INVALID.

The reply to the American blacklist note was now on the way to Washington, and this answered the American criticism of the principles behind the measure. As regards the administration of the blacklist Lord Robert said Washington had forwarded very few individual complaints about it.

Replying to the charge that Great Britain is violating its equal treatment provisions of the Anglo-American treaty of commerce and navigation of 1815 by granting licenses to Japanese and French exporters, while refusing permits to American shippers for similar goods, Lord Robert Cecil said that such restrictions were in the hands of the board of trade, but that he was personally of the opinion that such treaties lost validity during a state of war.

Continuing, the minister of war trade said:

DIPLOMATIC BARGAINS.

"German public opinion appears to be obsessed with the idea that the way to deal with the allied blockade is to have a succession of sudden crisis with neutrals which may be used for striking diplomatic bergains. These bargains, in the mind of Germany, always take one form: That Germany is to refrain from violating international law and humanity in return for the abandonment by Great Britain as toward neutrals of the legitimate military and naval measures of the allies.

"In the last few weeks there has been a recrudesence of this idea in Germany coupled with a good deal of talk of peace and mediation, and the press of the whole world is now conjecturing that the appearance of a submarine off the coast of the United States is the first step in a new attempt at a bargain of this kind. It is an ingenious idea, but it does not have the advantage of being novel among nations. It has been the usual device resorted to from time to time by militarist governments which have substituted might for right. Napoleon tried it with his militant decrees and it failed then as it will fail now.

NOTHING BUT BLACKMAIL.

"The whole of the recent German foreign policy has proceeded on the same principle. Kiao-Chow, Agadir, the mailed fist and shining armour are examples of the international procedure. In private life it is called blackmail. It may be well to say at once in answer to these German ideas of international diplomacy that the sinking of ships off Nantucket is precisely calculated to prove at once the danger of any concessions by the allies, and the injustice of the many American criticisms levelled against our naval and military measures.

NO "PETTY ANNOYANCE."

"Three weeks ago Americans might have argued that the presence of British cruisers in American waters just outside the three-mile limit was in view of the present stage of war, merely a petty annoyance. What has happened is a sufficient commentary on the argument. Again Americans have

Solicit in Canada For German Relief

STRATFORD, Oct. 14.—That the German-Americans are sending out requests for war relief money in Canada, under the noses of the Canadian post office authorities, was evident today when a Stratford merchant received a letter from the Teutonic war relief committee, Broadway, N.Y., containing German war relief stamps, with a return envelope for remittance. No doubt hundreds of these have been received in Canada, and it is humiliating that appeals from this source should be permitted to circulate in Canada.

British Positions Improved in the Thiepval Region

Over Two Hundred Prisoners Captured By the British and Eight Hundred by the French Forces—Berlin Admits British Success

COUNTER ATTACKS ARE REPULSED

LONDON, Oct. 16.—British troops improved positions in the Thiepval region and took about two hundred prisoners. British have taken three hundred additional prisoners in neighborhood Schwaben redoubt.

PARIS, Oct. 16.—French troops yesterday captured the hamlet of Genermount, northwest of Ablaincourt. Over eight hundred prisoners taken. Intermittent cannonading on the rest of the front.

Germans launched heavy counter attacks last night but all were repulsed. French gained ground at several points. French aviators brought down a number of German machines on the somme front.

BERLIN, Oct. 16.—German War Office admits that the British took German positions in hand to hand fighting north of Thiepval.

Ground Seemed To Rock And Sway When British Guns Fired On Germans

"Sight of Fascinating Horror Seeming to Pass Bounds of Reality" Says Officer Describing Tremendous Bombardment of Hun Trenches—Army of Panic-stricken Rats Driven From Hiding Places by Shock of Guns.

We had been lying in that village for two months, and any there may be who still look on a modern battle as a ding-dong, hell-for-leather performance joined without any apparent preliminaries would do well to consider how we spent the time. I was at that time with a brigade of field artillery, and had a shake-down in a loft over one of the few unsmashed cottages. In peace-time it must have been a pretty village enough as these French villages go, and one could picture well the daily life that ebbed and flowed through its narrow, twisted street, the Sunday morning egress of its population, all in their black clothes, the ringing of the bell in the tower, and the greetings on every doorstep; and then the weekly packing up of rickety old carts and waggons to go into the neighbouring town to the fair. But all this was long passed when we arrived on the scene. The churchgoers were scattered through villages and towns far behind as refugees, the church bell itself lay with the debris of its broken tower among the graves in the churchyard, and as to the fairing, the only traffic that rolled and rattled through the streets was that of guns and ammunition carts.

RUIN AND DESOLATION.

We took up our quarters there one wet and blustery afternoon, riding in piecemeal from our last billets. The surrounding country was a terrible picture of ruin and desolation. The fields were untilled, grown over with grass, and pock-marked with shell-holes. At all the cross-roads and along the roadsides stood the lonely wooden crosses that marked the graves of men struck down by shells and buried where they had fallen. The farmhouses that stood about like islands on the flat, rain-sodden land were empty and ransacked from room to room. Here and there in the shelter of the blank walls, on the sides away from the enemy, little groups of men had built themselves dug-outs, framing them with old doors and window-sashes. The ruins of the church tower, like some pinnacle on a rocky coast, stood out frightful and daunting as we drew near, and four great shells pitched round about it, hurling up fountains of black smoke and earth.

It looked an unpromising home, and we all felt sure we should be blown to fragments or, at the best, driven out of it within twenty-four hours. Shells fell about the village daily; sometimes they would come in salvoes for half an hour at a time, when we had to seek the shelter of our dug-out, a cellar which we had roofed in with sandbags. The nights were lurid with the fitful glare of the trenches and anon would break into pulsation with the roars of our guns. Spent bullets flew about the roadway, cracking the tiles, and on more than one occasion coming in at our windows while we sat at supper. Often I had to go out to see some man wounded by a chance shell or by one of these prowling bullets, each journey an adventure enough in itself in ordinary peace-time.

A QUIET BEDROOM.

I shared the loft with a fellow officer. We had each a bundle of straw to sleep on. One end of the place was a lumber of all the old rubbish of the house, musty curtains, potato sacks, and the remains of a bicycle. The rafters were festooned with strings and dried onions. Some of our guns were actually behind us and fired over the loft, so that I used to lie awake at night with the reports hitting the walls like blows of a monstrous hand and the shells hissing across with the noise an iceberg might make in hell. The shells would pass over and roar away into the night, driving the air in waves before them with a sound like hammers thundering on iron plates, until one heard the distant thud of their explosion in the German lines.

It was strange with what an orderly regiment we settled down to this life. My servant came and called me in the loft every morning, bringing me my canvas bucket to wash in. After breakfast we parted on our several rounds—the colonel and his adjutant to inspect the gun positions, myself to ride round the waggon lines and the ammunition column, posted in villages behind us, and to see any sick or lightly wounded men who might have come in during the night to the battered old cottage which I had made the dressing-station.

There was much hard work to be got through, and one might soon have come to realize, had I not already learnt the lesson, that war is not a succession of theatrical rushes and charges, but a steady grind of infinite labour and patience, calling for unremitting attention day after day until the scene is ready for the denouement. Long maps lay unrolled on the table in our room; long rows of figures and mathematical calculations; flying officers brought panoramic films which they had secured from among the clouds; day after day guns were "registering" their prospective targets; telephone wires ran all over the fields from the observing posts to batteries, from battery to battery, from them all to headquarters, until it seemed as if the entire country had been enmeshed in the webs of gigantic spiders.

At night we sat round the lamp with the window carefully screened, and amused ourselves as we pleased. Suddenly the telephone would ring. The adjutant leapt to it. "Infantry report a working party in front of their trench at ——, sir." The colonel thought for a moment, then "Tell X—— to open fire," said he. A minuter later, bang! bang! bang! went the guns, the shells roared past us into the night, and we heard them burst, thud! thud! thud! and pictured that working party tumbling over each other and running for dear life. There was something almost ludicrius about the casualness of it.

The morning dawned gloriously fine and calm. Birds began to sing in the trees in the orchards which clustered about the ruined village; there was the usual snap-snap of snipers' rifle fire from the trenches. Of a sudden, precisely at the half-hour, a terrible rolling crash broke out from before, behind and to either side of us. The ground seemed to rock and sway, and hundreds of tiles lying loose on the roofs came clattering to the roadway. There was no cessation; crash joined crash and roar joined roar till the whole made one loud ringing symphony. One might have been shut up in a cave with all the thunders of the mountains rampaging to escape, or in the interior of some monstrous bell, like that of the Kremlin, on which ten thousand smiths were hammering. I myself was in an orchard in which four howitzers were firing; yet even the ear-splitting reports of these great pieces were lost in the general thunder.

Panic-Stricken Rats.

After ten minutes or so I saw a curious spectacle. Fronting us was a great barn with several shell-holes in walls and roof. An exclamation from some soldiers drew my eyes thither, and I saw the red tiles well-nigh blackened with an army of panic-stricken rats. After rushing madly about for a few seconds the whole mob of them fled down the side of the barn and made like a stream of water for the ditch by the roadside. It was a fearsome sight, for though we had been so plagued with the creatures that they used to leap about on us while we lay abed, we had not realised the vast numbers of them that must have lived about us and shared our homes.

I climbed the broken stairway of a cottage and looked through a hole in the roof at the line of the trenches. It was all one swirling tumult of dust in which the red, angry splashes of the shells went and came like sparks from a grindstone. It was a sight of fascinating horror seeming to pass the bounds of reality. It seemed like some terrific manifestation of nature engineered by the artifice of man, as if man had at last learnt to convert himself into one of the great natural forces and set himself on a shelf with the volcanoes and the lightnings. From the contemplation of it I was soon called away by the report of some casualties in one of by batteries, for the enemy was beginning to reply, and I had the task of finding for myself a pathway through his iron messengers. They were beginning to dot the fields all about us now in an aimless fashion, like the paws of some blinded monster roaring with fear and agony. The wounded stretchers borne shoulder-high were going back to the dressing station behind us. It all seemed a terribly useless exhibition, and the sun went on shining gloriously.

"Sit down, Barnes," said Mr. Germaine in a rather patronizing voice. "I called you in to speak of the sad affair of the Richelieu's purser, Mr. Vernon. As our chief detective, I thought that possibly you might have something of interest to tell us about the matter."

"I have given it some thought," remarked Barnes non-committally.

"And no doubt you have made some investigations aboard the vessel?"

"Yes. There was not much to find out. Poor Vernon fell into the hatchway—that's clear enough. Why he had Mr. Morris's package in his pocket I can't say. If you want my opinion, however, I would venture the suggestion that he was walking in his sleep. People in that state do queer things. It is highly probable that, while in a somnambulistic state, he opened the safe, took out the package, walked to the forward deck, and fell into the hold. That's about all there is to it."

"You don't think, then, that we need make any further investigations?"

"What for? The coroner has declared the case an accident. We are not out anything. Mr. Morris got his package. I should say that the best thing to do was to let the matter drop."

Mr. Germaine puffed meditatively at his cigar for some moments in silence. "Mr. Morris, it seems," he said at length, "is not satisfied. He has telephoned me this morning, saying that he has evidence that a crime has been committed. He insists upon an investigation. I am expecting him here at any moment."

"I don't see how I could take up the matter, Mr. Germaine. You know I'm kept pretty busy at the pier."

"I know. I had not thought of having you take it up. As a matter of fact, I asked one of the passengers who arrived on the Richelieu — M. Lefevre—to do so. He is a very great expert in criminal matters—the prefect of police of Paris, as a matter of fact. No doubt you have heard of him."

Mr. Barnes's eyes opened. "Lefevre!" he exclaimed. "Well, I should say I had. No better man in the world. But I shouldn't think he would bother himself with an affair of such slight importance."

"Very likely not. He would not agree yesterday, and this morning he has to come in and give me his answer."

"You'd be mighty lucky to get him, Mr. Germaine, if, as Mr. Morris says, there is more to this thing than appears on the surface."

"Mr. Morris is urging me to place the matter in the hands of Mr. Richard Duvall."

Barnes's face was a study. "Duvall?" he exclaimed contemptuously. "Why, he's not to be mentioned in the same breath with Lefevre."

"You know him, then?" asked Mr. Germaine, surprised.

"Oh, yes! Known him for years. He had an office here in town before he moved down South. I thought he had given up detective work."

"Then you don't think much of his abilities?"

"Duvall's well enough. Bright fellow, of course; but too much of a theorist to my way of thinking. The 'kid-glove detective,' we used to call him. I've been on a number of cases with him—you know he handled those international bond-forgery frauds for the government. Pays entirely too much attention to detail. Builds up a whole case on a burnt match or a half-smoked cigar. Guesswork, I call it. I believe in going after your man with a gun and let him do his explaining after he's behind the bars. I'll bet it's he that's got Mr. Morris started. Well, Mr. Germaine, you know your own business, of course; but my advice would be, if you bother with the affair any further, let Lefevre handle it. He can make circles around Duvall when it comes to work of this sort, believe me."

"Thank you, Barnes, for your advice; whether we shall go any further depends entirely on what Mr. Morris has to say. If his story seems reasonable, we shall investigate it."

As he spoke, the banker was announced. He entered the room, shook hands with Mr. Germaine, acknowledged the introduction to Barnes, then proceeded to tell them in a few concise words the results of the investigations that he, with Duvall and M. Lefevre, had made the previous afternoon.

Mr. Germaine sat back in his chair, astounded, as the banker cited fact after fact, going to show that Vernon's death had in all probability been anything but accidental, and that the package entrusted to his care had been opened, its contents removed, and a forged letter put in place of the original one.

"I tell you, Mr. Germaine," he said in conclusion, "ther has ben a murder committed on board your vessel, and as a result an innocent girl has been grossly defrauded. I, as a party to the affair, feel a moral responsibility to investigate the matter to the full. I trust you will place the matter in conclusion, "there has been a murdicate both your company and myself."

"After what you tell me, Mr. Morrie, I shall most certainly do so."

"You could not do better than engage that young fellow, Duvall."

Mr. Germaine waved the suggestion aside with his cigar. "Entirely too much of a theorist. Mr. Morris. We want a practical man—a man accustomed to such cases. I only hope that M. Lefevre will consent to serve us. Duvall is all right in his way, but Lefevre is a man of a million. He is coming here this morning. If he takes up the case I shall feel that everything will be done to clear it up."

As he concluded a boy arrived with the intelligence that Mr. Lefevre was outside.

"Show him in!" cried Mr. Germaine eagerly. "Show him in at once!"

M. Lefevre came into the room immaculately dressed, a boutonniere in the lapel of his coat, and his gray moustache waxed to needle-points. He shook hands with Mr. Morris and Mr. Germaine, bowed to Barnes, then sat down and began to remove his yellow chamois gloves. "Mr. Germaine," he announced before the latter could speak, "I have decided to undertake your case."

"Good!" The managing director beamed. "I am delighted to hear it, monsieur. Now I know that it will be cleared up with a very few days."

"I am not so sure of that, my dear sir. Mr. Morris has, I believe, informed you of the events of yesterday afternoon?"

"Yes."

"Then, no doubt, you realize that a rather complex situation confronts us. However, I shall do my best to unravel it. If for no other reason, I should be glad to be the means of seeing justice done to Mlle. Mercier, who is of my own country."

Just as they reached the door Mr. Morris stooped and picked up a small object from the floor.

"By George!" he remarked. "Another franc-piece."

Duvall took it and examined it carefully. "Also of the period of the first Napoleon," he said. "I wonder which was the one old Mercier really sent—this, or the one we just gave to his daughter? Neither, probably. Will you call her please?" he said to the clerk as they reached the ground-floor. "I would like to speak to her for a moment."

The maid came forward, no better disposed toward her questioners than she had been before.

"Mademoiselle," Duvall said to her earnestly, "you have in your pocket a franc-piece which your father sent you and which we recently placed in your hands. I want to give you a piece of advice. Do not part with it. Do not carry it about with you. When you leave the hotel place it in an envelope and have it put in the safe. Some day it may prove of great value to you. Will you do as I ask?"

The girl saw that he was in earnest. "Yes, monsieur," she replied. I will put it in the safe now, since you advise it. I might lose it, it is true; and as a keepsake from my father I value it too highly for that." She took the coin from her pocket, enclosed it in an envelope she took from the hotel desk, wrote her name upon it, and requested the clerk to place it in the safe.

"Why did you do that, Mr. Duvall?" asked the banker as they reached the sidewalk.

RUSSELL MAY GET ITS LIQUOR BACK

OTTAWA, Oct. 14.—The management of the Russell hotel now stands a good chance of regaining possession of the $10,000 worth of liquor which was seized from the vaults of the hotel by the Ottawa police a week ago. The right of the authorities to confiscate the goods was questioned by Mr. W. L. Scott, counsel for the defense, in police court yesterday.

Through his lawyer, H. L. Maley, manager of the Russell hotel, pleaded guilty to a charge of keeping liquor stored on the premises in violation of the Ontario Temperance Act.

The Russell hotel was not charged with offering the liquor for sale. They were only charged with keeping it on the premises.

Mr. Scott contended that the management of the Russell house was only liable to a fine, and that according to a section of the Temperance Act the authorities were obliged to return the liquor seized.

"They have offended against the law," he said, "but they had no intention of selling the stuff. They were unwise in keeping it there."

Crown Attorney Ritchie was inclined to agree with the counsel for the defence, that according to the Temperance Act the liquor could not be confiscated. He, however, maintained that all Magistrate Askwith was to do was to pass sentence and let the owners of the liquor take steps to recover it. Although the defence pleaded guilty the magistrate reserved his decision.

"As it is a very important matter to render a judgment that will wear and stand throughout the time of the Act, I will take time to come to a decision," he said. Judgment will be given next Friday.

Isn't this a wonderful Oven

Glass Door
Tested Thermometer
Walls of nickeled steel
Economy flue system
Ventilation

WHAT more could be added? Here is an oven you enjoy using, an oven that saves your fuel, and that helps you serve finer meals than you ever thought you were capable of cooking.

1 The Glass Oven-door saves all the time you used to spend getting up and down to watch your baking. Now a glance, as you go about your other work, tells you how everything is baking in the oven.

2 There is no guess-work about the heat of this oven. That is because we test it with the Pandora Thermometers. When the Oven is right, the thermometer says so. Now, that means a lot in having your bakings always the same.

3 And should the cooking bubble over, the Pandora oven is so easily cleaned. The quick-heat steel used in making the oven walls is heavily nickel-plated. No metal could be more sanitary, and rust-proof.

4 But the saving of coal—one of the natural reasons for the success of this wonderful range—is not all made by the special walls of the oven. The nickeled steel allows heat to penetrate into the oven very quickly, but it is the McClary flue system that directs the heat twice around the oven and stops the usual wastage.

5 The Ventilated Oven carries off all cooking odors. You know what that means—no smudge or disagreeable odors around the house at meal times.

PRESS COMMENT ON IRISH CONSCRIPTION.

"Presents a Problem."

Philadelphia Inquirer:—"It is ab problem whose solution must be undertaken in a spirit of broad and enlightened statesmanship and that an attempt to coerce the Irish people would probably be attended by consequences of a most serious and regrettable character."

"Deliberately Affronting."

Albany Argus:—"To impose conscription from outside after the generous volunteering that has been done—six thousand since the Dublin outbreak—is with the deliberate purpose of affronting the people."

"Politics Behind Movement."

"Has American Sympathy."

St. Louis (Mo.) Republic:—"Ireland insists in at least as much freedom in that regard as Canada has, and in that demand Ireland has American sympathy and has always had it."

DOUBTING CHRISTIANS DISHONOR THEIR GOD

Confidence in the Bible the Basis of Faith.

Comparatively Few Today Have This Assurance—The Reason for This Condition—Higher Criticism and Evolution Have Undermined the Faith of Many—Abandoning the Blasphemous Errors of the Past, the Majority Are Casting Aside the Bible — The Apostle Warned That in the East of This Age Many Would Depart From the Faith—How Christians May Be Fully Assured of Divine Acceptance.

[The matter under this heading is supplied by the Pastor Russell Lecture Bureau, who conduct the Brooklyn Tabernacle (unsectarian) Bible Studies, and who have arranged for its publication.]

Providence, R. I., Oct. 15. — Pastor Russell was here to-day and addressed a large audience upon the theme, "Full Assurance of Faith." His discourse was based upon Hebrews 10: 22 — "Let us draw near with a true heart, in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, and our bodies washed with pure water." He said in part:

Full assurance of faith is something that every Christian should have; and yet we are all sadly aware that in our day but comparatively few professing Christians have this assurance. The great majority seem to be losing their faith; and, worse than this, they are in many cases losing the very foundation, or basis, for faith. For years the great colleges of Christendom have been undermining faith by undermining the Bible. They do not make an attack upon faith itself; indeed, they all admit that it has its place, and to a glorious quality. But straightway they proceed to do the same work that Thomas Paine and Robert Ingersoll tried to do—to undermine confidence in the Bible as the Word of God.

Confidence in the Bible is the very basis of faith. After one has lost his confidence in it as the Word of God, what has he left? He would have merely the vagaries and guesses of Higher Criticism and Evolution. We have very little use for guesses. We have little confidence in fallen flesh. We know that all men are imperfect in every sense of the word, that their judgments are exceedingly fallible. When men undertake to picture a God to their own liking, we have as many gods as there are men.

Looking into the past, we see what many of the noblest minds came to in the way of image-worship, bowing down to some of the worst ideals that could be imagined; for more black misrepresentation can be done by pen and ink or by the printing-press than by making the most hideous idols of the heathen nations. The creeds of Christendom have carved out the worst idol in all the Universe. Yet great men made these creeds—men of noble minds. This shows us how little confidence we can have in any theory that men can evolve. We may be sure that if we had been in their places we could not have done any better. We are not finding fault with them. We are finding fault with the real source of the whole matter. This the Apostle Paul declares when he tells us that "the god of this world" has been responsible for this misleading. Satan has done this lest the light of God's goodness should shine into men's hearts.—2 Corinthians 4: 4-6.

Basis of Faith Gone With Many.

The Apostle also explains why it is that many Christians cannot see the light of the Gospel of Christ—the true Message of salvation. Satan has gotten his bandages upon their eyes, and as a result they cannot see the things of God. The Apostles warned the Church that after their time many would depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of demons. (2 Peter 2: 1, 2; 1 Timothy 4:1.) We have come to the time when many good, intelligent people—including ministers in the various pulpits, professors, theologians, presidents of colleges, etc.—confess that they have lost the basis of their faith.

We are not for one moment to suppose that those who have lost confidence in the Bible as the Word of God are wicked people. On the contrary, the majority of them are fine, well-intentioned people, but they are under a delusion. The delusions of the Dark Ages coming in contact now with the full blaze of the New Dispensation just upon us, there is a conflict between the light of our day and the darkness of the past. There is such a clash that everybody sees stars, so to speak. People are astonished, and do not know what to think.

Some are still holding to the Bible in a sort of blind way, bewildered and uncertain as to their real position, hoping against hope that they will not lose that little faith they have. Afraid to think and afraid to read lest they be cast adrift in an unknown sea. We sympathize with these people. But the fact is that one never have had faith enough to worry about. It was not a well established faith, a full assurance of faith. On the contrary, it was a blind faith, a kind of credulity. They have hoped that they were of the elect; but they had little or no conception of what is meant by election as to what this class were elected. In the light of our day such faith, or rather credulity, is crumbling to pieces.

The Christian's Firm Foundation

Yet at this very time when Higher Criticism and Evolution are undermining the foundation of religion, and when nearly all thinking people are losing faith in the Bible as the Word of God, how gracious our Creator has been to those who have retained their faith in His sure Word! The eyes of their understanding are opening more and more widely; and they are coming to see that the Bible is the most wonderful book in the world. Never before have God's people understood the Divine Plan as they do now, in the midst of the turmoil of all the denominations and of the learned men of all lands. Truly we can sing with the poet:

"How firm a foundation, ye saints of the Lord,
Is laid for your faith in His excellent Word!
What more can He say than to you He hath said,
You who unto Jesus for refuge have fled!"

We have often wondered whether God did not partially inspire some of these precious hymns that have cheered, comforted, and refreshed the Lord's people in their journey through the wilderness of this world; for they seem to fit so wonderfully our time and our condition, and the real knowledge of God's Word seemed so dimly at the time when many of them were written. The strongest language would not be strong enough to-day to express the faith, the confidence, the trust, which we have in our God through seeing His real character and His real plan as outlined in His Word. This is full assurance of faith.

There is a vast difference, however, between a full assurance of faith and a full assurance of credulity. Credulity is a readiness to swallow everything and anything, without any real basis for believing, without proof. This is what most people have called faith. But it is not. Faith must have a basis; and the basis must have some intelligent presentation.

When asked, "Why do you believe the Bible?" many people will reply, "My father and my mother believed it; and I was taught to believe it." When called to question as to their real basis of faith, they look bewildered, hesitate, and either acknowledge that they have chosen or else change the subject to something else. This is not faith; it is mere credulity. Heathen people do as well: for their parents and their grandparents believed their heathen books. To exalt human, the Bible it is necessary that we understand it. That which gives us faith in the Bible is proof that it is the Word of God. To understand it we must understand God's Plan therein outlined; we must learn rightly to "divide the Word of Truth."—2 Timothy 2:15.

Higher Critics are busy trying to prove that Isaiah never wrote the book of Isaiah, but that it was written by different persons; that Moses never wrote the Pentateuch; that Daniel never wrote the book called by his name. The fact that Jesus and the Apostles quoted from these books and ascribed them to the very authors claimed in the books has no weight whatever.

The Basis for Our Faith.

Our confidence in the Bible is based upon the fact that it contains a great Divine Plan, far superior to anything that mortal man could have produced. Show me a watch with the wheels revolving with perfect precision and with perfect relationship to each other, a watch that keeps correct time without variation; and I shall know that some skilful hand, guided by an intelligent mind, made that watch. Such a piece of workmanship never came by chance. The hands did not get on the dial by accident. There was some intelligent power in operation there.

So it is with the Bible. When we find the prophecies of the Old Testament, the types of the Mosaic Law, and the teachings of our Lord Jesus and His Apostles all interlocking, based and dependent one upon another in the most marvelous way, all telling the same story, although written by various men, in various ages, and under various conditions, with Genesis describing the fall of man into sin, with Revelation portraying his recovery from the fall, with each intervening book corroborating both—tell me, Who made that Plan? No one could convince me that any human being or set of human beings made it. The very conditions of today, so wonderfully fulfilling the prophecies of the Bible, are amongst the strongest proofs of its Divine inspiration.

An Argument With an Infidel.

Once in early life I had an argument with an infidel, who claimed that "the Bible was written by priests and knaves." When I asked him, "Which set of priests and knaves do you think made it up?" he hesitated; for he had not anticipated that question. Then I suggested that we reason a little on the subject. I showed him that if any of the denominations had made the Bible, they would surely have put into it many things that are not there, and would have left out of it many things that are therein.

For instance, they do not know what to do with the doctrine of the resurrection of the dead. Having a theory that at death people go to Heaven, Purgatory, or Hell, they have no need of a resurrection. Yet they know that it is in the Bible. If ever they come across it in their reading, it is a sort of "thorn in the flesh" to them; for it disturbs their peace of mind. Nor do they know what to do with the Judgment Day. They must think that the Judgment is past. Otherwise how could the dead be in Heaven, Hell, or Purgatory? Then there is the theory of the Trinity, in which all, practically, believe, though not a word of Scripture justifies such a belief.

Surely our Calvinistic friends would not make up the Bible as it is to-day. Neither would our Arminian friends. The latter would surely leave out all of those texts which speak of an election, of foreordination, of predestination, of making our calling and election sure, of "the very elect," etc. The former would doubtless leave out some of the texts which tell about free grace; for these do not fit with their idea of election. Of course both would put in something about a Trinity; for all hold that theory as the very essence of faith. The thing which you cannot understand, and which is the most mysterious is the most important!—1 Corinthians 8: 6, 7; Ephesians 4: 4-6.

The Bible Simple, Reasonable.

But, dear friends, from the standpoint of itself the Bible is simple; and everything is thoroughly explained, when we get our mental telescope properly adjusted and see the wonderful Plan of God as it is mapped out in His Word. However, no amount of learning or of worldly wisdom or of knowledge will enable one to see this and to have a heart appreciation of it. The deep things of God are revealed only by His Holy Spirit. (1 Corinthians 2:10.) They are especially clear at this time, because God's due time has come for the full unfolding of His Plan. These deep things are revealed to the faithful, watching children of God, who are walking hand in hand with the Master, seeking in all things to be guided by Him.

Thank God for the Morning light! Thank God that we are living in the time when the path of the just is shining so brightly! For it was to shine more and more unto the Perfect Day. (Proverbs 4:18.) Now the Perfect Day is almost here. It is so near that we can see the first rays of its dawning, although before its full glory breaks upon the world the storm clouds will gather dark and gloomy, and soon will let fall "hailstones and coals of fire." But it is merely the darkness that precedes the full dawning.

The creeds formulated during the Dark Ages have greatly injured the whole world. Doubtless many people to-day are following sin who would, if they had a right knowledge of God, would be following after righteousness. Many men have been led to drink, to debauchery, and to all sorts of sin simply by reason of not seeing the true God. For any one to see the real God is to love Him. Mankind are made upon that basis. Notwithstanding the six thousand years of the Adamic fall, there is in every man's head—unless he be an idiot or in some way deformed—that quality of reverence of a Supreme Being and a desire to render worship.

Profitable Questions for God's People.

The Christian's assurance of faith is based upon the Word of God and the realization that he has taken the various steps which God therein directs. He tells us that by nature we are sinners, that Christ Jesus tasted death for every man, that by and by He will give Restitution to human perfection to whomsoever will accept the arrangement which He has made and which is soon to be opened up to all mankind. He tells us, too, that during this Gospel Age there is a Call for those who desire to come out from the world to be a peculiar people unto Him, a Royal Priesthood, a holy nation, zealous of good works, zealous of everything that is God's will, and ready to lay down their lives in the doing of it. Have you heard and accepted this Call?

To those Christians who do not have that full assurance regarding their standing with the Lord which they wish to have, and which is their privilege, we would suggest that they ask themselves the following questions:

Have I forsaken sin and accepted the Lord Jesus Christ as my personal Redeemer? Have I made a full consecration of myself to God through Christ, giving Him my time, my means, my all, surrendering myself fully to His keeping, to be henceforth guided by His Holy Spirit in all things as His will is made clear to me through His Word?

As I thus gave myself to the Lord, did I realize that I am still imperfect, and that my standing before God is only in Christ? Did I realize that thus He imputed, or counted, to me the perfection which He would otherwise give me in the next Age, in order that now I might lay it down in sacrifice with Jesus, sharing His sufferings and death that I might also share His glory, when His Kingdom is set up for the blessing of the world?

As the result of my consecration to the Lord, am I able, to some extent at least, to grasp spiritual things? Do they appeal to me? Am I gradually attaining a holy mind, a holy disposition? Do I desire above all things to do God's will, and is my mind feeding fruitage to the Lord's praise so that others can see it? Am I gradually growing more meek, more gentle, more patient, more long-suffering, more kind and loving? Is my heart growing broader, deeper, and more sympathetic?

Whoever can say "Yea!" to these questions, even though keenly realizing, as all God's children should, that he has many imperfections, may have full assurance of faith that he is a child of God in full standing, that the Father's smile of approval is upon him, and that if he continues thus to develop in the likeness of Christ he will inherit the Kingdom as a joint-heir with Christ Jesus our Lord.

We may be blamed as if we were evil-doers; our evils the Lord Jesus manfully assumed, and so were all His Apostles. But as far as possible let us live to it that all complaints against us are because of our faithfulness of Christ and His Word. Then shall the spirit of glory and of God rest upon us, and we may indeed have the "full assurance of faith" and the joy which are the present inheritance of His saints, "having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, and our bodies washed with pure water"—the Water of the Word.

HUSBAND SAVED HIS WIFE

Stopped Most Terrible Suffering by Getting Her Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Denison, Texas. — "After my little girl was born two years ago I began suffering with female trouble and could hardly do my work. I was very nervous but just kept dragging on until last summer when I got where I could not do my work. I would have a chill every day and hot flashes and dizzy spells and my head would almost burst. I got where I was almost a walking skeleton and life was a burden to me until one day my husband's stepsister told my husband if he did not do something for me I would not last long and told him to get your medicine. So he got Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for me, and after taking the first three doses I began to improve. I continued its use, and I have never had any female trouble since. I feel that I owe my life to you and your remedies. They did for me what doctors could not do and I will always praise it wherever I go."—Mrs. G. O. Lowsky, 419 W. Mowbray Street, Denison, Texas.

GOOD ROAD MOVE GRIPS ILLINOIS

BLOOMINGTON, Ill.—Oct. 13.—Illinois at last appears to have awakened from the Rip Van Winkle sleep which has prevented her citizens from keeping pace with the good roads movement which is weeping over the country.

Vermillion county has voted a bond issue of $1,800,000 for a system of hard roads; McLean county will shortly vote upon a bond issue of $2,000,000 for the same purpose, while Peoria county is now considering a report from a special committee of the board of supervisors recommending that a bond issue of $1,750,000 be voted upon.

Many other counties are progressing in the same direction, but upon a less extensive scale. Credit for the revolutionary change of public sentiment is given exclusively to automobiles.

Flock to Inspect Work.

Vermillion county is now the Mecca for inspection parties from all over the middle west. Not a week passes but a delegation arrives to see what this county is doing in order that a report may be made. All appear to be anxious to learn about the methods being used and the attitude of the taxpayers.

Within two years Vermillion county will be able to boast of 146 miles of roads paved better than the average city street; a complete system connecting every town in the county; four trunk lines, so called, extending east and west, and two north and south, constituting the main arteries of travel, and in addition a number of shorter lines which mark the heavily travelled sections.

Pay Attention to Drainage.

Careful attention has been paid to drainage, while the culverts are of concrete and ample in width. The first road was constructed of concrete for the base, an inch layer of sand, and the brick surfacing. After it was completed it was decided to change the plan slightly. Now the bricks are laid directly upon the soft concrete base, thus fitting perfectly into the foundation, forming a solid slab of cement and brick. The new plan is believed to make the most lasting and satisfactory form of monolithic pavement that can be constructed.

The eighteen foot road first completed cost $20,000 per mile, while the ten foot road cost $14,600 per mile, the sand cushion adding to the expense. The roads later constructed, omitting the sand are costing $12,000 per mile. The roads in which concrete alone is used, the brick face being omitted, cost $7,400 per mile.

"I was a great sufferer from eczema and only found relief when I used Dr. Chase's Ointment. Two years ago these sores of Dr. Chase's Ointment cured me and the old trouble never returned. My skin is as soft as a child's now, and I shall always say a good word for this Ointment."

WAPIOAK GUILTY OF MURDERING WOMEN

Indian Makes Full Admission and Jury Brings in the Verdict.

KENORA, Oct. 13.— With a calm indifference, careless of the consequences, and as if telling a story of the hunt, Wapioak, one of the Indians being tried for the murder of Mrs. Heubner and Miss Ernie Heubner, yesterday, went into the box and admitted in detail the murder of the two helpless women.

Before the trial he made two confessions, one of which he dictated to the police inspector, and the other he wrote himself, for Wapioak is a good penman. In the first confession he said Joe Kee-wee-ta-ka-mo-skung made him shoot a woman, taunting him by saying he was a coward like a woman. In his written confession he also placed the blame on Joe.

In giving his evidence this afternoon he said he did all the shooting, and the description of his movements tallies pretty closely with other evidence given by various witnesses. During his replies to the Crown Prosecutor, J. F. MacGillivray, Wapioak frequently smiled; in fact, his demeanor indicated that he hardly realized his position.

Mr. Justice Kelly heard the case. Sentence will not likely be passed until the conclusion of the trial of Kee-wee-ta-ka-mo-skung, which was commenced this afternoon.

Hot Water for Sick Headaches

Headache of any kind, is caused by auto-intoxication—which means self-poisoning. Liver and bowel poisons called toxins, sucked into the blood through the lymph ducts, excite the heart which pumps the blood so fast that it congests in the smaller arteries and veins of the head producing violent, throbbing pain and distress called headache. You become nervous, despondent, sick, feverish and miserable, your meals sour and almost nauseate you. Then you resort to acetanilide, aspirin or the bromides which temporarily relieve but do not rid the blood of these irritating toxins.

A glass of hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it, drank before breakfast for awhile will not only wash these poisons from your system and cure you of headache, but will cleanse, purify and freshen the entire alimentary canal.

Ask your pharmacist for a quarter pound of limestone phosphate. It is inexpensive, harmless as sugar, and almost tasteless, except for a scarcely tringe which is not unpleasant.

If you aren't feeling your best, if tongue is coated or you wake up with bad taste, foul breath or have colds, indigestion, biliousness, constipation or sour, acid stomach, begin the phosphated hot water cure to rid your system of toxins and poisons.

Results are quick and it is claimed that those who continue to flush out the stomach, liver and bowels every morning never have any headache or know a miserable moment.

Without Flurry French Awaited Word To "Go Over" and Win Trench

No Hesitation, They Went Straight Ahead—Germans Attempted Counter Attacks Which Failed—Huns Admit Important Gains for Allies on Somme Front

WITH THE FRENCH ARMIES IN FRANCE, Oct. 18.—(From a staff correspondent of the Canadian Press, via Paris).—There was tense excitement, but no flurry, on the French front just before the assault delivered Tuesday. The men stood to their arms coolly; they looked to the breaches of their rifles, loaded their magazines, loosened bayonets in the scabbards, fixed the straps of their steel helmets and tightened their belts. Some of them sat down with their backs against the side of the trench writing what might be their last messages home, while waiting for the word to "go over."

There was no hesitation when this word came. The men, with confidence, all their muscles taut, clambered out, sprang forward and gained the ground they had been sent to win.

Had Approach Trenches.

The correspondent of the Canadian Press had the opportunity of being in the midst of the movement of preparation at a certain point on the French line "somewhere south of the Somme." The first line trenches here were two or three hundred yards apart. The French with great rapidity dug approach trenches, zigzagging forward fifty to eighty yards, where they were joined up by a trench known as the "taking off parallel." From this running still further out, saps were cut, leading toward the German lines. These saps were occupied by listening sentinels and armoured machine guns emplacements. From the bottom of the taking-off parallel steps were cut in the earth which led to the level ground.

Watched the Attack.

Up these steps the companies chosen for the assault sprang on the signal, spread out in open formation and dashed forward in sections toward the German works which had previously been almost battered out of existence by the French guns. An artillery curtain of fire had been started by the Germans to prevent the arrival of French reinforcements, but its effect on the French troops was almost nil.

The correspondent, before the assault, watched French trench mortars pitching great five hundred pound missiles directly into the German trenches some two hundred yards from where the correspondent stood. The slow flight of a projectile could be followed from the muzzle of the gun to its destination, and enormous black clouds of earth were thrown up by the explosion.

Canadians Busy Again.

London, Oct. 12.—The official communication from British headquarters in France, issued at midnight, reads:

"All day long shelling was directed against our front south of the Ancre, especially north of Courcelette, at the Hessian trench, around the Stuff redoubt and in the neighbourhood of Fliers and Cueudecourt.

"North of Courcelette the enemy attempted an attack but was caught on his parapets by our barrage and stopped. Our guns also dealt effectively with bodies of hostile infantry assembling in the rear of the enemy lines. The prisoners reported in the past 24 hours from the Somme numbered two officers and 48 men.

Enemy Repulsed.

"At neuville St. Vaast this morning the enemy attacked a crater occupied by us but was caught by our machine gun fire and suffered considerable loss. A similar attempt near the Hohenzollern redoubt was also repelled.

Many Air Fights.

"Yesterday our aeroplanes destroyed by bombing two enemy battery positions and damaged many others. They penetrated well behind the enemy's front and bombed railway stations, trains and billets with good effect. There was much fighting in the air and in one case two of our machines engaged seven hostile aeroplanes and drove them down or dispersed them. One of these enemy machines was seen to be destroyed: two others were severely damaged. Four of our machines are missing."

Repulsed Two Attacks.

Paris, via London, Oct. 12.—The official communication from the War Office issued last night reads:

"In the Somme region there were reciprocal bombardments along almost the whole of the front from Morval to Chaulnes.

"The enemy launched two violent attacks on our new positions in Chaulnes Wood. Both were repulsed after a sharp hand-to-hand struggle. Grenade attacks at the edge of St. Perre Vaast Wood also were repulsed.

1,702 Prisoners.

"The total number of prisoners taken in yesterday's operations south of the Somme reached 1,702, including two battalion commanders and 25 officers.

"The usual cannonading took place on the rest of the front."

Huns Admit Losses.

Berlin, Oct. 12.—An official announcement says:

"North-east of Thiepval, fighting for possession of a small point of support has not yet come to a conclusion.

"South of the Somme the French, after artillery preparation which lasted for several days, succeeded in penetrating into our position at the salient projecting towards Vermandovillers and in forcing our troops to the previously prepared line, cutting off this salient. Genermont and Boveq Farms are situated in the abandoned position.

Weighing Reveals Greater Shortage

OTTAWA, Oct. 14.—A much greater shortage in the weight of the bags of cement supplied the city than was revealed when the first test was made last week was discovered yesterday, when fifty bags were placed on the scales. Each bag was supposed to weigh between 87 and 88 pounds, and an average shortage of over five pounds per bag was shown.

A representative of the Canada Cement Co., which supplies the material, has come to Ottawa to conduct an investigation. The cement is not supplied directly to the city from the producers, but through a local agency. The representative is unable to explain how the shortage occurred, but expressed his intention of conducting a full inquiry. He intimated that ultimately the city would lose nothing on the shortage, as the cement was purchased by the pound and the city would be required to pay only for the amount actually received. However, it is only in the last week or two since Secretary George H. Wilson was "tipped off" about the shortage that every bag purchased has been weighed. Fifty bags were weighed yesterday and a total shortage in weight of 750 pounds was shown.

The representative of the cement manufacturers had a long consultation with Secretary Wilson this morning. He told the press that Ottawa was the first place from which complaints about shortage had been received. The cement plant in Hull is not operating now and the material is coming from the Montreal plant.

Laid in Whiskey To Last His Lifetime

Seaforth Man Wanted to Make Sure of Supply For Self and Wife 14 Years

CLINTON, Oct. 18.—Before Police Magistrate Andrews here, Jacob Weber of Seaforth testified that the twelve half barrels of whisky which he had brought in previous to the closing of the bars and shops was for the use of his wife and himself, and expected it would last them for perhaps fourteen years. He claimed that at the price he bought it, viz., $2.25 a gallon, it was as good an investment as five per cent. farm mortgages, and as he also expects that while the Province might in the future give licenses to sell beer and wine, whisky would likely be cut out entirely, he was laying in a stock to do him during his lifetime, and told the court the only fear he had now was that he might not have enough.

The prosecution proved that the liquor had been bought from Walsh Bros. of Stratford, 320 gallons, at a cost of $7.42, and arrived in Seaforth by waggons about 3 o'clock in the morning, but Weber explained this by saying that he did not want everybody to know that he was putting in such a stock, and chose to bring it in at night rather than by freight, although that would be the cheaper way.

While the charge of causing liquor to be brought in for other than personal use was dismissed, there is another charge to be tried later that of storing for sale or other disposal, and until this is disposed of the twelve kegs which were seised are in the custody of the Inspector.

MINISTER OF WAR TRADE HINTS DEUTSCHLAND HAD CANADIAN, ETC.

suggested that our trading-with-the-enemy regulation and our refusal to allow British goods to go to certain firms in America is also petty and unnecessary.

WAS CANADIAN METAL?

"That sounded reasonable a week before the Deutschland appeared in an American harbour, but when I tell you that the Deutschland took on board in American certain vitally necessary metals, of which there is a serious shortage in Germany for munition purposes, and that there is reason to believe these particular metals were a part of the small stock mined in allied territory, you will see again how important it is that we should take precautions to prevent allied property getting into the hands of those who we know will use it to help our enemies. We can only do this by preventing British subjects at home trading with firms that will help the enemy with supplies obtained from us.

UNITED STATES NOT OUTSIDE PALE.

"It would be all very well if we could sit down at any moment and say the war has settled down into certain known channels. But war never does that. War is a continued succession of unexpected strokes. Recent events have shown that even American waters are not outside the area of war.

"Any concessions made by the allies in regard to their war measures—the abandonment of the defensive armament of their merchant ships, the withdrawal of their cruisers from certain parts of the high seas, the allowing of stocks of materials needed by Germany to accumulate in the United States from British territory without some kind of assurance that they will not reach the enemy, the export of British materials to firms known to be in sympathy with our enemies—all these things at any moment assist the German armies in the field to prolong the war, and, even in the extreme case, jeopardize our success.

MUST REMAIN ON GUARD.

"By the enterprise of the Moewe, the Deutschland and the U-53 and the continued carefully prepared conspiracies in the east, conducted through territories in the United States and by organized outrages against American factories and Canadian public works, Germany has gone out of her way to prove there is no point at which the allies can safely abandon, in any part of the world, the measures which they are entitled to take under their national rights and under the laws of war."

Allies' Demand On Greece Nipped Widespread Plot To Use Fleet For Germany

LONDON, Oct. 14.—According to the Times' Athens correspondent a conspiracy existed in Greece to officer the Greek fleet with anti-Entente sympathizers, and to concentrate in Thessaly, in the rear of the Allied armies, troops, guns, stores and material from Athens and elsewhere. The correspondents adds that the precautions taken by the allies through an ultimatum to counteract these schemes caused no surprise in Athens.

The newspapers yesterday published an interview granted Ward Price, the official British press representative, by Eliutherios Venizelos at Salonika, in which the former premier denounced King Constantine as responsible for the present state of affairs in Greece, and outlined further plans for the provisional government, which include the raising of an army corps to fight on the side of the Entente allies against the Bulgarians.

In the interview M. Venizelos declared that it was his intention of himself and his collaborators to set up a formal government in Salonika, exercising all powers of state, levying existing taxes to maintain the military service and arise and equip troops. M. Venizelos said that when in September, 1915, he urged upon the king the necessity of fulfilling Greece's treaty obligations with Serbia, King Constantine replied:

"I am prepared to leave the internal affairs of Greece to the Government, but in international relations I consider myself alone responsible before God for their direction."

Poll Tax Collected In An Improper Way

Wages Garnisheed and $5 Tax Added—Should Have Seized Chattels

INGERSOLL, Oct. 13. — Money which was collected a few weeks ago from a number of foreigners in payment of their poll tax must be refunded by the town. The men were engaged by McRae & Campaigne, who have been doing street work here. The contractors experienced considerable difficulty, and one day when a number of the men quit work prompt action was taken to collect the five dollars poll tax in each case. Their wages were garnisheed, and the poll tax, with costs added, collected. Yesterday, in the Division Court before his Honour Judge Wallace of Woodstock, action was brought to recover the money that had been collected from the men. The Judge upheld the contention on behalf of the men, pointing out that the proper way to collect the poll tax would have been by seizure of their chattels. The money, with the costs of the action, must therefore be returned.

KENT COUNTY AND CHATHAM DEALERS IGNORE WAR STAMP

Seven City Men and Four Outsiders Fined $50 and Costs.

CHATHAM, Oct. 14.—In the county police court four Kent County men were each fined $50 and costs for failure to place war stamps on patent medicines, as required by the special war revenue act. They are W. D. McKellar of Muirkirk, J. H. McKim of Kent Centre, J. T. Hill of Highgate, and Charles Shields of Clearville.

The charges were laid by J. H. Dagar, special officer of the inland revenue department, who claimed that he had purchased goods on which the stamps had not been affixed.

For having neglected to put on the war stamp required by the inland revenue special war tax measure, W. A. Sample, M. J. Minderff, George Bartlett, Smith's Grocery, J. A. Macl ness, Wm. Burnie, Grocers, and the manager of the Canadian Smallwares Company were fined $50 and costs each. The prosecutions followed an investigation by Provincial Officer J. H. Dager of Toronto.

A number of other soldiers who have just returned from the front came in on the same train.

LADIES! DARKEN YOUR GRAY HAIR

Use Grandma's Sage Tea and Sulphur Recipe and Nobody Will Know

The use of Sage and Sulphur for restoring faded, gray hair to its natural color dates back to grandmother's time. She used it to keep her hair beautifully dark, glossy and attractive. Whenever her hair took on that dull, faded or streaked appearance, this simple mixture was applied with wonderful effect.

But brewing at home is musty and out-of-date. Nowadays, by asking at any drug store for a 50-cent bottle of "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," you will get this famous old preparation, improved by the addition of other ingredients, which can be depended upon to restore natural color and beauty to the hair.

A well known downtown druggist says it darkens the hair so naturally and evenly that nobody can tell it has been applied. You simply dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one strand at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears, and after another application or two, it becomes beautifully dark and glossy.

Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound is a delightful toilet requisite for those who desire a more youthful appearance. It is not intended for the cure, mitigation or prevention of disease.

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

GIRL'S DRESS.

By Anabel Worthington.

Additional importance attaches to a school frock for fall, when the design provides for a separate skirt to be formed of material that will protect against the cold and which may be easily adjusted by buttoning to a blouse of rub fabric. It is just such a dress that we illustrate under No. 7,953.

To simulate a box plait a band of material is stitched to the right front of the blouse, which is gathered at the lower edge, front and back, and which extends well below the normal waistline, in keeping with the mode. Sleeves that just turn the elbow are finished with roll cuffs, but full length sleeves with wristband cuffs also will be correct. The low neck is finished with a sailor collar, and a tie in bright color is added for effectiveness.

The full plaited skirt is buttoned to the blouse under a belt of material. A pocket is stitched to each side of the front for novelty. The pattern will give an exact reproduction of this design.

Serge, plaid, cheviot, tweeds and the like will be appropriate for the skirt and any preferred fabric for the washable blouse, silk included.

The pattern is cut in sizes 6 to 12 years. To make No. 7,953 in size 10 will require 2 yards of 36 inch material for the waist and 2¼ yards of 36 inch material for the skirt.

You may obtain the pattern by sending to the office of this publication.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required, and age if a child.

Price 15 cents, or 2 for 25 cents.

Munitions Shipments Are To Continue

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

NEW YORK, October 16.—Shipment of munitions to warring Europe will continue unabated unless worse submarining occurs off the American gateways than has to date, marine men said to-day. While they did not discount the possibility of new raids the safety of the giant French liner Lorraine, the Scandinavian-American liner Hellig Alav, and the American liner St. Paul, lent strength to the thought that the raiders may now be streaking homeward.

NATIONAL SERVICE DIRECTOR RESIGNS

BUT IT DOES NOT EXPLAIN

OTTAWA, Oct. 15.—Sir. Thomas Tait has resigned his position as Director of National Service, and is to be succeeded by R. B. Bennett, M.P. for Calgary. This is the somewhat sensational announcement officially communicated to the press to-night from the Prime Minister's Office. The statement announcing the resignation of Sir Thomas, who left for Montreal on Friday after writing Sir Robert Borden that he was throwing up the job, is accompanied by an official "explanation," which, to say the least, does not fully explain, and leaves much to be read between the lines. Apparently Sir Thomas resigned because the Government had expressed some days ago dissatisfaction with his selection of Mr. G. M. Murray, Secretary of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, to be Secretary of the Directors of National Service.

TROUBLE OVER SECRETARYSHIP.

The trouble between the Government and Mr. Murray arose over a circular which he issued a few days ago to the members of the Manufacturers' Association criticising the Government for not adequately protecting the interests of Canadian Manufacturers in regard to equipment supplied to Canadian overseas forces by Great Britain and paid for by Canada. The Government claimed that Mr. Murray misrepresented the facts of the case, and pending retraction and apology would not ratify Sir Thomas Tait's selection of Mr. Murray for Secretary. Finally Mr. Murray explained the "misunderstanding" satisfactorily to the Government, and then the ban on his appointment by Sir Thomas was removed. But, strangely enough, just when everything was apparently straightened out, Sir Thomas himself resigned.

SIR THOMAS' LETTER.

Sir Thomas Tait, in his letter of resignation to the Prime Minister, dated October 12, said: "In view of what has occurred in the case of Mr. G. M. Murray, who had been offered by me and had accepted the position of Secretary of National Service, and if that incident is indicative of what may be anticipated in connection with the future organization of the work of National Service, I feel compelled, after serious consideration, to relinquish the position of Director-General of National Service, and I therefore do now resign from that position."

The resignation was forthwith accepted, and now the Directors of National Service, with R. B. Bennett, M.P., giving the lead, have asked for a political coalition in starting and stimulating the reorganisation work of recruiting and other war work in so far as the utilisation and conservation of Canada's man power are concerned.

Sir Robert Borden has acquiesced, and has written to Sir Wilfrid Laurier asking the latter's co-operation in the formation of the proposed Parliamentary National Service Committee.

THE CALL FOR CO-OPERATION

The resolution passed by the Directors of National Service at the conclusion of the conference here on Thursday was made public only to-night. It was formally communicated to Premier Borden on Friday, and is in the following terms:

"The Directors of National Service in conference at Ottawa, having regard to the duty imposed on them and to the work which lies before them, are strongly of the opinion that the following recommendations if given effect by the Government would materially assist in that work:

"That a Parliamentary National Service Committee, to be compos-

Eastern Ontario Battalion in Which Many Peterboro' Boys Are Fighting Were Leading Wave of Canadian Advance on Sept. 15th

GAINED OBJECTIVE

Fire Chief Howard has received the following interesting letter from Quartermaster-Sergt. Sam. Thomas, of the 21st Battalion, and a former member of the local Fire Department. The well-known Peterborough boy writes as follows:

France, Sept. 30th, 1916.

W. A. Howard, Esq.:

Dear Sir,—I am in receipt of your letter and recommendation. For same accept my many thinks. I am now on the waiting list and cannot say, just when my turn will come, but I will wait patiently. No doubt you heard about my brother (Fred). He got hit in throat severing his juglar; he never knew what hit him, dying instantly. At the time he was showing some of the new reinforcements the way sandbags were laid; and during the demonstration a rifle shot got him. He tried to gain his feet, but fell back into the trench a dead man. He had the uttermost respect of his officers and comrades. And there is no one at a greater loss of a pal than I myself. He had his work at heart which won the confidence of his officers. There have been many men killed whom, I, personally knew, and was very sorry to hear the news. But when I heard about Fred my feelings were as never before, but I hope that God will give them strength at home to bear the sorrow. War is a horrible proposition, when it takes away from us, those whom we love, it breaks so many hearts, but still there is a purpose behind it all, and the Guiding Hand that rules all things. It is grand to think that this isn't the end of our existance, and I pray if it be God's will to be returned to my wife and boys in the near future.

The war seems to be well in our favour just lately. Our guns are pounding Fritzie night and day, and infantry actions continually. Our battalion

BUILDING THE MEMORIAL A PRESENT-DAY DUTY

Men and women throughout the country are making the erection of mausoleums, monuments and smaller memorials a task for themselves — for their own supervision — rather than leaving it to others after their departure.

More and more is the installation of memorials in family burial lots being considered a present-day duty. And when selections are made—whether to mark new graves or to stand in readiness for the time when they are needed—the suitableness of Barre Granite makes a strong appeal.

Barre Granite,

the rock beautiful and everlasting, is free from flaws. Its texture is sturdy. Its power to resist time and weather is unquestioned. Marked beauty—whether in hammered or polished form—combined with density and strength that produce everlasting qualities—make it the ideal stone for memorials, large or small.

The Coughlin Monumental Works have just put in a car load of this famous grey granite from Barre, Vermont, and will be pleased to show designs and quote prices. This firm have a large up-to-date plant for polishing and carving granite, and employ only high-class workmen, and can manufacture any kind of a memorial, polished, carved or hammered. Can quote manufacturers' prices and save the customer extra freight and duty.

Besides the Barre Granite, the Coughlin Monumental Works manufacture monuments from the beautiful grey granites produced from Canadian quarries in Quebec and New Brunswick. [illegible] and Swedish granites. 14-1w

A SENATOR FOR PETERBOROUGH.

From time to time the Examiner has protested against the neglect of Peterborough by the government in the matter of filling Ontario vacancies in the Senate. We have not only protested, but suggested, a candidate that would be acceptable to the respectable majority of Conservatives, and one who would, on the grounds of local patriotism, be acceptable to the mass of Liberals, so far as the party in opposition can be held to have a right to be consulted. The Examiner can expect no partisan gain from a senate appointment—according to the laws of political warfare and according to the practice of the present government. But there is something above the interests of party that a journal devoted to the interests of its constituency can be expectd to strive for—the principle of Canada for Canadians, involving the interests of the local community. Peterborough deserves a senatorship, and Mr. James Kendry, ex-alderman, ex-mayor, and ex-M.P., deserves consideration not, only for his fidelity of his services to local interests in the various capacities indicated by a titular suggestion of his past services, but on the lowest grounds, those of fidelity to party interests. He has represented the riding in the Conservative interests and there is large reason to believe that to-day he represents, or is held in first place by the best elements of his party in Peterborough. The chief reason, however, of local import that calls for a senator for this county and district is that justified by local patriotism. In the distribution of senatorial honours we have been ignored in the recent past, and that the demand for such representation is approved by all men of both parties.

DIRECTING RECRUITING.

Even if two years behind time, the government is to be given credit for a sort of interest in giving direction and consequent directness, to recruiting. It has appointed directors of a National Service campaign, who are to relieve the government from the responsibility for recruiting, which has rested so lightly upon it for the past two years. The modus operandi of the National Service Commission may be briefly summarized. It is proposed to take an inventory of the man power of Canada, to exempt from military duty those whose services are regarded as valuable to the state and to identify them by badges. Women's work is intended to be more extensively used and more thorough organization made with that end in view. An important part of the work of the directors will be the granting of badges to those who offer for enlistment but who, in the opinion of the directors, are more needed in their present occupations. Such a test will clear the conscience of many men who are perplexed as to where duty lies, but it will prove embarrassing to others who are filled with excuses why they cannot go and fight.

Some benefit may yet be derived from the efforts of the National Service directors. Its agency may have come rather late, but at least we see the government in a way preparing to take more direct interest in recruiting, something it has officially failed to do since the war began. But right in the beginning, things have come to a standstill. The sensational announcement was made in Ottawa on Saturday that Sir Thomas Tait, universally considered one of the best men in Canada for the position, has resigned as Chief Director of recruiting because the government has refused to sanction Sir Thomas Tait's selection of a secretary; and the former with his hands tied in the beginning, tells the government why he has been compelled to resign. If its action in regard to the secretary is to be regarded as "indicative of what may be expected in the future of National organization," his usefulness is gone. The government seems to be unable to get out of the partisan rut, even in an interest that demands absolute unity of action regardless of any consideration but the main object—to get recruits. Mr Murray, the rejected secretary, was secretary of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, and his statement, made some time ago, that the government had not adequately protected Canadian manufacturers in the supply of military equipments, was held against him, though his relation to the manufacturers themselves, very vitally related to the recruiting problem, indicated one phase of the fitness that doubtless appealed to Sir Thomas Tait.

THE HIGH COST OF LIVING.

The Borden Government has no keen a sense of its responsibilities, that it has formed the habit of shouldering them upon commisions. We are assured that the Government is dealing with a heavy hand with the problem that makes us all hungry—for relief—the high cost of living. A few days ago at a cabinet council presided over by Hon. Robert Rogers, a commission was appointed to investigate the high cost of living. This is a finer thing on paper, than it promises to be in practice. It may be all right, but in relation to the public interest, it bears too striking a family resemblance to asking for bread and getting a stone. It is a stately way of shelving or side-tracking a troublesome question. History will more than probably repeat itself. About three years ago the Government appointed a commission to study and deal with the same problem. It spent a lot of money in nosing amout the country, and it cost a lot of money to print its report, which, ponderous as it was, was simply to the effect that everything was for the best. The chief beauty of the report was that, while it did nothing to relieve the situation it presented nothing to prompt or compel the Government to take action. Now we have another commission appointed; but there's little comfort in that. If it takes its time to report like the other commission—three years—in the meantime we should be slowly starving and at the end the commission will tell us nothing that we do not already know to our sorrow. The Government will have done and will probably do nothing, though if it were willing, it could do something, for there's reason to believe that it has a shrewd idea of what is wrong. The Montreal Herald puts the matter this way:—

> The vexing part of the cost of living, from the administration's point of view, is that the Government know what is the trouble. They know that their ownwanton squandering of the people's money, the sky-high taxation they have placed on all the necessaries of life, and their own disinclination to take action similar to the action of the British Government to prevent extortionate prices, are what are causing the high cost of living. To admit this would be to condemn themselves. But they have to make something the scrapegoat, for the deputations of labour men who have been waiting on them reveal widespread discontent. So they perpetrate their little joke of appointing a sub-committee to wonder and ponder the cause, and to stick up a straw man for them to knock down.

THE GUARDS GO FORWARD

Philadelphia Ledger: Lest any man suppose that in modern war-making the machine has put out of business the man who set it in motion, it would be well to read the story of the charge of the Coldstream Guards in the great battle on the Somme. The "solid waves of men" imperturably advancing against the enfilade fire of the machine-guns depended for their cohesion on the valor of each soldier in his place. It was not a mob in a fury, but a thrilling object lesson in discipline. Even for the newest in the ranks it was not the discipline of a day nor of a year, but the inflexible tradition of a quarter of a thousand years since General Monk built the regiment at the little border town in Berwickshire, Scotland, whence comes the name. Of its splendid history each man in its membership is heir. The Grenadiers and the Irish Guards who followed this glorious regiment into action were not less valient. The Grenadiers were created in the same year—1660—with the Coldstream Guards; the Irish Guards were created in 1902, after the Boer War. So much of the history of the current war has been that of the trenches that a charge of this epic character had begun to seem as obsolete as Pickett's famous assault at Gettysburg. The world has now learned that it is still the man behind the gun and his hero's initative that determine the issue, and not a remorseless impersonal mechanism of wholesale demolition.

"THOSE CRUEL TANKS."

(New York Times.)

The Germans refer to the "tank" bandit cars of the British as "cruel engines of warfare. And they must be shocking to the soft-hearted conquerors of Belgium and the vivisectors of the naval fight in which the Lusitania was sunk.

LIVE STOCK MARKET

TORONTO, Oct. 16.—Live stock receipts very heavy. Market firm. Choice heavy steers, $8.10 to $8.75. Hogs, f.a.w., $10.65; f.o.b., $10.15; off cars, $10.90. Others steady.

The Relation of Peace Alarms To Treacherous German Diplomacy

The stock market is a very useful animal, but it cannot be guaranteed sound in wind and limb and free from vice. It is like one of those right chestnut horses—beautiful to look at, but all nerves. Until you see the direction in which its ears point you cannot tell whether it is going to balk or to bolt. A mere scrap of paper being blown across the road may scare it into frenzied activity.

Last week the market first became panicky on peace rumours and then it became more panicky on war rumors. It didn't altogether like the idea of a sudden peace, which would bring down with a ruin the market value of munitions stock, and it didn't relish the idea of the war being brought to New York's front door.

It is proverbial that where there is smoke there is fire, but sometimes a very little fire will make a very big smoke, and even the faintest smell of smoke will lead the stock market to fear that it is going to be frightened. Just now the air is full of smoke, or in other words is saturated with peace rumors. The most alarming one, from a financial point, is that peace is imminent, but is coming in separate pieces (no pun intended); that Bulgaria will soon say: "I have had enough"; that Turkey will say, "I feel that I have had too much"; and that even stupid Austria-Hungary will be looking for a lot for its own occupation in the graveyard of nations. Greece is eager for war, and even the King of the Hellenes who is German by marriage, is chiefly anxious to be in the fight when peace comes.

In the meantime, nobody who is anybody in the United States can say a word about peace without causing shivers in Wall Street. Why this should be is not very apparent, because nobody in Europe takes the slightest notice of what anybody says in the United States about peace prophets. There is just one man connected with the Government at Washigton whose utterances would be of more than local interest; and that is Mr. Gerard, the American Ambassador to Berlin, and his statements would derive their chief interest from the fact that he is not in Berlin, and from the professional reticence which distinguishes him from other American public men. He promises to get a great reputation as a diplomat by keeping his mouth shut. He has not the fine tact of the European diplomat, which would enable him to talk a lot without saying anything. His diplomacy is not "as wide as a church door, nor as deep as a well," but it will serve. If the kaiser came to New York, which, as everybody knows, is the metropolis of Greater Germany, and which, heaven forefend, we cannot imagine His Imperial Majesty saying that he came for a holiday or to see a baseball match.

There are just two parties who are essential to any peace agreement, one is Germany, the other is the Entente. Germany is yearning for it with one long persistent incessant yearn; but she cannot have it at present because the Allies do not want it, and will not have it upon any terms Germany might "grant." Lloyd George and other Allied statesmen have made it abundantly clear that any neutral intervention will be regarded as an impertinence and a symptom of the disease called pro-Germanism. Germany has evidently abandoned all hopes of indemnities and annexation "commensurate with the sacrifice it has made" in its endeavour to enslave the world and rob the nations, but it still hopes, by its characteristic treacherous diplomacy, to snatch some fruits of apparent victory from overwhelming defeat. This false appearance of victory may be only intended to conserve the Hohenzollern prestige and to deceive the German people, but what right have we to help in bamboozling the German people, to their own great disadvantage and to the peril of the world's permanent peace? The Allies will be satisfied with nothing less than the unconditional surrender of the barbarians, and it does not require any negotiation to arrange for that. We are not responsible for the starting of the war or the manner of its conduct, but we are quite prepared to assume the responsibility for the manner of its ending. Meanwhile, we say to all neutrals, "Keep off the grass."—Montreal Herald.

Missed U-Boat By Scant Few Feet

NEW YORK, Oct. 16.—Only a few feet of choppy sea stood between the United States and a new and grave crisis with Germany at the time of the raid of the U-53 last Sunday according to a story which is given prominence by several New York morning papers this morning. Details of the incident referred to are contained in a letter written by Lieut. Cumming Carry, of the United States destroyer Benham, in which the lieutenant describes how the Benham escaped collision with the U-boat by a few scant feet.

"When we arrived on the scene of the raid," says the letter, "the submarine was attacking the Holland-America liner Rio meradijk, and we ran in close. The U-53 signalled us, asking that we steer our course to a safer point, as she was about to blow up the Dutch ship. A few minutes later the submarine fired a torpedo, which tore a great hole in the liner's side, and sent her to the bottom. Then the U-53 suddenly extinguished her lights, and we went ahead at 25 knots in the direction of the Stephano, which was standing by waiting her turn. Suddenly the submarine turned on her lights and we just missed collision there by the margin of a few feet.

When Dreams Come True A Great Treat

Bright Amusing Comedy, Pretty Songs And Graceful Dancing

GRAND OPERA HOUSE, SATURDAY, OCT. 28TH.

"When Dreams Come True."

A St. John exchange has the following to say of "When Dreams Come True," which comes to the Grand on October 28th:

If somebody walks up to you to-day and in a hushed voice says, "suspicious," you will know they have been to see "When Dreams Come True" at the Opera House, and are trying to imitate 'Hercules Strong," the detective of the piece.

"When Dreams Come True" is called "a musical comedy of youth" and that St. John people love musical comedy was well shown by the large audience that filled the Opera House last evening. It was a very bright, amusing comedy they saw, pretty songs they listened to and graceful dancing they admired. Add quite a plot (for a musical comedy) many and lovely costumes and a splendid cast and you will know that last night's audience thoroughly enjoyed themselves.

The first act opens on board an immigrant ship and gives the scenes for the song of the evening, "When Dreams Come True," introducing the dreamer (though a lively person), to the idol of his dreams. This dreamer called 'Kean Hedges,' and the part is taken by Robert Adams, who is a skillful dancer in all the latest styles.

The Dream Girl, Beth (Miss Lorraine Lester), was very sweet and attractive with a charming voice. Miss Carmen Ercelle, who comes into the story, played the violin and danced beautifully. Comedy, a-plenty was supplied by the before mentioned Philo - Gubb-like person. Hercules Strong (Harlan Briggs) who created much amusement whenever he appeared and "Mathilda," the country cousin, who arrived after "a long wait" in the suburbs, looking for a husband. Mathilda is perfectly inimitable. Her accent and her costume are triumphs.

Miss Lester wore a lovely yellow chiffon gold embroidered gown in one act which was a joy to look at. In the exceedingly pretty bridesmaids' dance and tableaux Miss Ercelle was dressed in a white tulle with edgings of turquoise blue. Among the many lovely effects it is hard to select any one but the song and burlesque 'Come to the Movies' was much applauded. The chorus is good and introduced many novelties. Altogether it certainly was a delightful entertainment and we are fortunate to be able to enjoy it here.

The musical numbers follow:

Act I.

1. America, Immigrants.
2. "It's Great to be a Wonderful Detective," Miss Scott, Mr. Briggs, Mr. Henderson.
3. "The Town that Grows Where the Hudson Flows," Mr. Adams, Sailors and Stewardesses.
4. "Dear World," Miss Lorraine Lester.
5. "When Dreams Come True," Mr. Adams accompanied by Carmen.

Act II.

6. "Wedding Rehearsal," Miss Ercelle, Mr. Butler and Ensemble.
7. "Love is Such a Funny Little Feeling," Miss Mac and Mr. Briggs.

Songsters' Brigade At Hiawatha For Sunday Services

The visit of the Songster Brigade of the S. A. to Hiawatha yesterday was a grand success in every way. Good crowds attended the meetings. Several conversions took place. The music of the Brigade was very much enjoyed and the Brigade came home last night very much satisfied with their trip.

Mrs. McElheney conducted the services.

Presentation and Address To Mr. P. Kane By The T.A.S.

At the regular meeting of St. Peter's T.A.S. yesterday the society paid a tribute to the long and faithful service of Mr. Patrick Kane, who recently resigned as caretaker, to take up other work. Mr. James J. Hickey read an address on behalf of the members, in which full recognition was paid to Mr. Kane's interest in the society, the sacrifice of his time and labour for the various "At Homes," picnics, theatre night and for the general good of the T.A.S. He was then presented with a leather covered rocker for himself and a similar leather covered chair for Mrs. Kane, the presentation being made by Mr. M. Donoghue and Mr. George Ahearn, the present caretaker.

Mr. Kane, in reply, acknowledged the addresses and chairs in a neat speech, in which he remarked that his services would always be at the call of the society to whatever extent he could assist it.

A debate on the resolution that capital punishment should be abolished was very closely contested, and the decision was awarded to the negative side by a narrow margin.

Mr. V. McCabe and Mr. E. Reynolds presented the negative arguments, and Mr. J. R. Corkery and Mr. W. Hatrick represented the affirmative side.

The judges were Rev. J. J. O'Brien, Mr. V. J. McElderry and Mr. M. J. Maher.

This is one of the first of the fall series of special features, and it is expected that the work will be maintained throughout the year.

The T.A.S. orchestra is being reorganized and should appeal to those members who play instruments.

Five Priests Needed From Ontario For Service Overseas

That five priests are needed for chaplaincies overseas and that the Bishops in charge of the Dioceses of Ontario had been asked to provide men for these positions, was announced by Bishop O'Brien at St. Peter's Cathedral on Sunday morning. The supply of priests for parochial work at home was exceedingly scarce, but His Lordship stated that the priests would be despatched even if it were necessary to close some of the churches.

CHURCHES MUST PAY FOR GARBAGE COLLECTION

LONDON, Ont., Oct. 16.—The taxation of churches for garbage collection is valid, according to a decision given out Saturday by Judge Macbeth, who ruled that the general exemption from taxation enjoyed by churches did not exempt the property from local improvements and similar taxation.

The city churches were taxed last year, but the Court of Revision, being appealed to by two churches, held that in future such assessment should not be made. Assessment Commissioner Grant appealed to the County Judge. Another appeal from Saturday's decision may be entered in a higher court.

The potato crop is very light, but reports indicate that the quality is unusually good.

THE WEST END KNITTING CIRCLE

Ladies Have a Busy Winter Planned

The West End Knitting Circle opened their season's work at a meeting held on Thursday evening last at the home of Mrs. C. J. Rutherford, London street. This industrious little coterie of women has done splendid work in the past year, knitting in the neighbourhood of 300 pairs of socks, all of which have been shipped directly to Peterborough boys in the trenches. Incidentally the circle has some very grateful letters of acknowledgement from the boys on the firing line. There was a full attendance at Thursday's meeting, and plans for the season were discussed with an enthusiasm that augurs well for an increased supply of comforts. The gentlemen present subscribed sufficient funds to provide wool and materials for the winter's work.

BIG GARAGE WILL BE BUILT

Automobile Supply House To Be Erected on Water Street

It is understood that the plans are being prepared for the erection of a large garage and automobile supply house on the property just south of Fitzgerald's Carriage Works, which are to be occupied by an automobile agency in the city that has outgrown its present quarters. This will be a considerable improvement to that section of Water street that has been vacant so long.

Winch Party Is Back Home

Had a Splendid Outing at Ketchecum Lake

The Winch party to Ketchecum Lake returned Saturday, having put in a fine two weeks' camp. The camp was a large one, the weather fine and the fishing all that could be desired. Partridge are out of season and cannot be shot until 1918. Very few birds were seen and it is good for the sport that they are being taken care of, as it looked as if they might be almost extinct in this district in a few years of shooting.

The W. G. Ferguson party, to another section of Ketchecum Lake, went up Saturday for two weeks' camp.

Rev. H. J. Keith At Knox Church

Large Congregations Heard Former Pastor at Both Morning and Evening Services

Yesterday at both the morning and evening services, large congregations greeted the Rev. H. J. Keith, of Edmonton, who is on a visit to Peterborough after an absence of two years. At the evening service the speaker took for his text the words found in the sixth chapter, thirteenth verse of Paul's epistle to the Ephesians, which follows: "Wherefore take unto you the whole armour of God, that ye may be able to withstand in the evil day, and having done all, to stand."

"There is," said Mr. Keith, "a guarantee in this passage of final victory. One thing that the human heart of to-day craves for and that is victory. In that great conflict over in Europe which is characterized by so many possibilities, it is too soon to form any conclusion as to the hour of victory. Between you and me it is a battle of souls trying to work out through material things. When Abraham Lincoln was an outstanding figure in the administration of the United States a deputation waited upon him. At the conclusion of the meeting a member of the deputation said, 'I think we will win; God is with us.' To their great surprise Lincoln replied: 'I am not concerned about that. I am more concerned as to whether we are on God's side.'

The Moral Struggle.

"The great struggle over in Europe is on expression of the great struggle that has been going on, and is going on, in the souls of men. The background of our message to-night is over in Europe, and the struggle is with us. It is not too soon to look for victory. Kitchener organized for victory just as Paul shouted for victory early in the struggle. We should feel more concerned as to whether or not our souls will come out of the conflict untarnished and saved, rather than material results. One reason why so many people face defeat in the moral struggle of life is because they will not fight."

Murder Suspect Committed Suicide

Joseph Montgomery Found in a Dying Condition in Madoc Lockup

BELLEVILLE, Oct. 16. — Joseph Montgomery, of Madoc township, Hastings county, who was under arrest on suspicion of murdering his brother, Walter Montgomery, on the 4th of October, is dead as a result of self-inflicted wounds. On Thursday last the inquest over the murdered man was concluded and the suspected brother was placed in the lockup at Madoc Village, pending his removal to the county jail at Belleville to await preliminary hearing, which was to have taken place next Tuesday. It was intended to convey Joseph to Belleville on Friday night, but for some reason this was not carried out. During the night from some source he secured a small pocket knife and with it he slashed his throat. He was found in a dying condition at eight o'clock on Saturday morning. After having the wound dressed by physicians in Madoc the victim was brought to Belleville hospital, where he expired at 7 o'clock Sunday morning.

After committing the act Montgomery threw the knife in a stove in the lockup where it was found later with dry blood stains upon it. Yesterday morning an inquest was opened before Coroner Dr. Yeomans of this city. The jury after viewing the remains and hearing some evidence had the enquiry adjourned until Monday night.

The suicide was a man about 43 years of age and unmarried. The affair is shrouded in mystery and is complicated by events which have transpired. Since Joseph's incarceration his residence with all of the contents has been destroyed by fire.

JAIL FOR TRADER WITH THE ENEMY

Silberman Gets Five Years and Fine

PARIS, Oct. 16.—Wm. Chester Silbermann of New York has been sentenced by the Correctional Court to five years in prison and 500 francs fine on a charge of trading with the enemy.

Silbermann, according to the prosecution, came to Paris armed with papers describing him as the representative of the Knight Rubber Co. On the strength of these papers he obtained several important orders.

He was finally denounced by a Serbian who had known him in New York and who said he was acting for Gottwik, Scheffer & Co., 309 Broadway, New York, a firm with German affiliations.

Represented King Co.

New York, Oct. 14.—According to Paul Gottwik of Gottwik, Scheffer & Co., local dealers in drug sundries, Wm. Chester Silbermann represented in Paris the Kinz Rubber Co. of Hyde Park, Mass. Mr. Gottwik's firm is the New York agent for the King Company, and Silbermann, he said, had never been employed by the firm located here.

Before State Dept.

Both the King Co. and Silbermann are residents of New York, have placed Silbermann's plight before the state department at Washington, according to Mr. Gottwik.

"(a) A strong and explicit call to the manhood of Canada of military age and fitness to enlist for overseas military and naval service.

"(b) A similar call to the men and women of Canada individually and through their various organizations to serve the nation in such capacity as their services may be of most value.

"(c) A similar call to all employers to effect such industrial reorganization as is necessary to meet exigencies arising out of the war."

REQUEST TO OPPOSITION.

The statement given out to-night adds that the Prime minister has written to Sir Wilfrid Laurier expressing the Government's desire to have such a committee formed and asking Sir Wilfrid to co-operate. It is further stated that "it is therefore expected that such a committee will be selected in the immediate future for the purpose of making the proposed call."

THE GOVERNMENT'S STATEMENT.

The Government's statement in part is as follows: "The incident which led to Sir Thomas Tait's resignation arose ont of his proposal to appoint Mr. G. M. Murray, Secretary of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, to the position of Secretary of the Directors of National Service. All proposed appointments are in the regular course submitted to the Government for approval. In order to accept this appointment, however, Mr. Murray resigned in advance his position as Secretary of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association. Objection was taken to the proposed appointment of Mr. Murray on the ground that a circular which he had issued to the members of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association misrepresented a communication to him from the Minister of Finance with regard to the use of Canadian products and materials for the equipment of the Canadian forces while in Great Britain. It was felt that while this circular remained uncorrected the Government could not consistently approve of Mr. Murray's appointment to the position mentioned. On October 10 Mr. Murray wrote a letter to Hon. Sir Thomas White, in which he frankly admitted this error in framing the circular. Upon receiving the letter from Mr. Murray containing this acknowledgment it was felt that no further objection on that source would be raised. However, Mr. Murray apparently thought that an objection had been raised in the first instance he could not consistently accept the position which had been offered to him by Sir Thomas Tait. As a result of this Sir Thomas Tait felt called upon to resign, and his resignation has been accepted by the Prime Minister."

PTE. CLIFFORD EASTON.

Pte. Clifford Easton, who enlisted here with the 57th regiment quota to the second contingent, and went overseas with the 39th Battalion, afterwards transferring to another Canadian battalion at the front, is officially reported killed in action. Pte. Easton boarded at 281 George street, and became a member of the 39th Battalion on March 1st, 1915. His relatives live in Havelock.

The Kingston Standard Says:

The information as published in Wednesday's issue that the Canadian Patriotic Fund would not pay money to dependents of men in Special Service units brought out many stories at the camp. The general feeling is that the men in the Special Service Battalion, at least those who are medically fit, should continue to receive this money because of the prospect for their quick departure overseas at any time.

There are between fifty and sixty and possibly more men in the Special Service Company at the camp who are medically fit and will be going overseas with the three battalions. They were taken into the S.S.C. for several reasons. Some had not been operated on to remove slight defects, some were absent when their battalion left, and others are there for special reasons, though not because of any physical disability.

The view taken is that the Special Service Company is merely a link that joins units of the C.E.F. and its members to a large extent are training for overseas, and the members certainly express their hope of a trip to the front in no light terms.

The chance is rather a sweeping one when one considers the great numbers of men involved—over 300 alone in No. 8 Company here—and there will in all probability have to be an adjustment.

KINGSTON, Ont., Oct. 14.—A telegram was received on Saturday morning that Major John Macdonald Mowat, son of Mrs. J. B. Mowat, of Kingston, had been missing since October 9th and that he might have been killed in action on that date.

Major Mowat went overseas with a Vancouver battalion, which was broken up into drafts after it reached England. In order to get to the front as quickly as possible, he accepted the temporary rank of captain. He was in action with the Canadians on the Somme front.

Major Mowat was one of Kingston's most popular sons. After graduating at Queen's, he entered the legal profession and practiced here until he went to Vancouver in 1912, to join a leading law firm of that city. He was mayor of Kingston in 1906, and 1907. In 1911 he was the Liberal candidate here for the Commons, but was defeated by W. F. Nickle on the reciprocity issue. In British Columbia Major Mowat was active in military circles since the war began, and went overseas last summer. For some years he was an officer in the 14th P. W. O. R. His mother lives here. He is a nephew of the late Sir Oliver Mowat, and brother of Herbert M. Mowat, K.C., Toronto.

In enclosing a programme given by the Canadian Massed Bands at Toronto, in which a number of Peterboro bandsmen participated, Drum-Sergt. Geo. East, of the 93rd Battalion, says that nearly all the buglers and drummers of the battalion are in France. Tom Cassidy and Bob Darrell went with the first draft, Max and Norman Patterson, Ken. Brown and Bill Johnson with the second, and Tom Sanderson, J. Armitage, Carr, Andy Ray and Jack McGarry with the fourth. Sergt. East also adds: "The brass band fellows are all well and still making good use of those splendid instruments the people of Peterborough gave them."

Peterborough Boys Chosen.

That the Peterborough boys in the Queen's Field Ambulance are soon going overseas is evidenced by the following letter received by the Examiner to-day:

Barriefield Camp, Oct. 15, 1916.

Dear Sir,—We thought that the Peterborough people might be interested in knowing what is to be done with the Queen's Field Ambulance Corps this winter, so write to say that a draft, composed of six medical officers, eight N.C.O.'s and seventy-five men has been chosen to proceed overseas immediately, the remainder of the unit to go into barracks in Kingston for the winter.

Among those composing the draft are the following men from Peterborough City and vicinity:

Corpls. R. Brock and W. Hamilton, Ptes. C. Hayes, N. Graham, H. Paquette, C. Butterfield, A. Dunelow, V. Lyle, E. Smythe, C. Vosden, A. Hardy, L. Bigelow, G. McCartney, F. McNeely, W. Mair, J. Young, A. Mills, A. Carrington, J. W. Adshead, C. Felstead, W. E. Gill, J. Connors, E. M. Robertson, C. Richardson, and J. Hubel.

The boys in all probability will be home on their last leave this week.

Trusting that this information will be of interest to you, we are, yours respectfully,

The Peterborough Bunch.

Big Soccer Games Off For Season

Matches Between Canada and the United States Not Likely Until Next Year

MONTREAL, Oct. 16.—The international football games between Canada and the United States will likely not be played till next year.

In a letter to the D. F. A. secretary, of which Pres. Gillespie, of the P.Q.F.A., has been advised, President Fernley, of the U.S.F.A., regrets this, after the negotiations had proceeded so far. From the tone of his letter it would appear some one had blundered, as the secretary of the U.S.F.A. failed to ask for the required permission from the International Federation while on his recent trip to Sweden and when he was in close touch with Federation officials. Mr. Fernley explains that the required permission (and neither association can play till same is obtained) could not be obtained before Oct. 29 or in time for the original dates suggested for the games. So he suggests that the games be played on the dates mentioned, April 19 and 21, which would be a fitting climax to the U.S.F.A. soccer season.

The latter would, perhaps, have the advantage of the Canadians, who would hardly have started their season, while the States would be winding up theirs. However, it is a certainty that the games cannot be played without the consent of the Federation International.

Lady Helen Grosvenor, who is conducting Y.M.C.A. canteens, at Woolwich, runs a suggestion box to constantly improve them.

SIR SAM LEAVES QUIETLY.

CAMP BORDEN, Ont., Oct. 14.—In a pouring rain, and unnoticed, Lieut.-General Sir Sam Hughes, Minister of Militia, left camp by special train at 2:30 p.m. yesterday, for his home in Lindsay.

After luncheon, Sir Sam, accompanied by Major-General Logie and staff officers, had been making a hurried tour of the grounds, owing to the Minister wishing to leave in the early afternoon.

The party had stopped at various points where troops were drilling, the Minister alighted and casually inspected the cook houses and various points in battalion areas. The pumping station, septic tank, the most recently-opened piece of equipment and the ordinance were paid a visit.

"There goes the Minister," shouted one who was first to notice the special disappearing past the end of the troop-train, but the departure went unheralded.

SPLENDID WORK DONE BY BARNARDO HOMES

Many Thousand Children Have Been Rescued and Given a Chance—Four Thousand of Them Have Rallied to the Flag With the Canadian Forces Alone.

"For God and country" floats the banner of the Barnardo Homes whose mission it is to rescue boys and girls from poverty, sin and wretchedness, and mould them into useful, productive citizens. This is the fiftieth anniversary of the Homes, and the annual report bears splendid testimony to the work which has been accomplished. Since the first Home was organized 82,126 children have been rescued. Of these 531 were infants under five years of age; 731 were cripples, incurable, blind, deaf and dumb, or physically afflicted. The number of children dealt with by the Homes last year was 13,479 . The average number of children permanently admitted every week during the year was 22, which number by itself would constitute a large family.

A Proud Record.

"No destitute child ever refused admission" is the charter and constitution of the Homes, and unceasing warfare is waged on anything that sets a cheap rate on child life.

Proudly the boys have rallied to the flag and 7,913 of them are serving in the army, navy and mercantile marine, although that by no means covers the total, since the beginning, for it would be impossible to compute the numbers for the last fifty years. There are 4,080 Barnardoites in the Canadian contingents alone; 17 from India, New Zealand, China and Jamaica; 66 have given up their lives; 120 have been wounded and 15 are prisoners of war or interned.

The children in the shelter of the Homes this year number 7,480. Last year alone, 2,758 were admitted from all over Britain, two-thirds coming from the Provinces and one-third from the Metropolitan area. The boys and girls who have emigrated to Canada during the year 1915 number 294.

"Give Me a Chance."

"Give me a chance," they say. Poor kiddies! That is what they all want, even if they do not know enough of what it means to put it in so many words. Instances could be multiplied by thousands of the little bearers of tales of woes whose lives are turned from tragedy into a state of contentment and work.

The Homes admit children of any creed or none. Roman Catholic or Jewish children being first referred to their co-religionists. The Homes do not admit a child not destitute, unless in the case of a girl from immoral surroundings. They earnestly endeavour to bring all their inmates under gospel influences. They secure to each child a religious upbringing in the tenets of the Church of England or as a non-conformist, according to parentage, wherever traceable.

No Mental Defectives.

Epileptic or mentally deficient children are not admitted. The agents of the Homes seek out, in the great cities, helpless children who, but for their intervention, might become tramps, loafers, or ne'er-do-wells, and eventually paupers or criminals.

The Homes adopt for their inmates that mode of upbringing best suited to each child. They maintain a garden city for boys; a village home for girls; a naval training school; industrial homes for the healthy; and special homes for babies cripples incurables, delicate and convalescent children. Industrial and technical training is given to the inmates wherever possible.

Many Sent to Canada.

More young people are sent from the Homes to Canada and the Colonies than from any other society or agency now at work in the United Kingdom. His Grace the Duke of Somerset is president of the Barnardo Homes, and it is the ambition of the incorporated association to keep on training and caring for these boys and girls who are not able to start out at an equal pace with their brothers and sisters that they may give them back to the nation a loyal and useful citizens—"patriotic strong, able and willing to protect the Motherland and to die, if need be, as many have already done, in her service."

John McDonald's Sudden Death

Lindsay Post. Death came with terrible suddenness to John Robert McDonald, of the Post staff, Friday startling suddenness to John Robert near the corner of Durham and Albert streets, when within a block of his home shortly after six o'clock.

The late Mr. McDonald had been in his usual good health and at six o'clock had left the Post building for his home. When going along Sussex street he complained of a pain in his breast, and rested on the pavement for a few seconds until the attack passed away. When near the corner of Melbourne and Albert streets, he turned south to Durham street, when he was again stricken. Mr. Putnam, who is employed at Mr. M. O'Halloran's butcher shop, and who boards on Durham street, was proceeding home when he noticed the deceased. He ran to his assistance, and found that he was dying. He summoned several of the neighbours, and Messrs. Wm. Cook, H. M. and D. M. Lockwood hurried to the scene. Mr. McDonald was taken to the residence of Mrs. Werry, and Dr. White was sent for. The deceased had passed away, however, before he entered the house, and was beyond all human aid.

The news of Mr. McDonald's death was received with regret by his many friends. The deceased was born in Omemee and was one of the town's best known citizens. He was one of the oldest active printers in the province, having followed the profession for upwards of fifty years. He learned his trade in the old Warder office, and also worked in the Post several years ago. He was also on the staff of the Port Hope Times and in the early eighties lived in Peterborough, where he was connected with the Examiner. The deceased afterwards went to New York, where he filled an important position, and in May 1908 occupied the position of foreman in the Post. The late Mr. McDonald was a devoted and conscientious employee and was held in the highest esteem by the management and staff, who were shocked to hear of his demise.

The deceased was a member of Faithful Brethren Lodge, A. F. & A. M., was a Methodist in religion and a Conservative in politics.

To his bereaved wife, who was prostrated when informed of his death, as well as five sons, the sympathy of the entire community is extended. The sons are Arthur, of Lac Frontiere, Quebec, George, merchant, Harriston, Ont., Percy, of Toronto, Albert, of Orillia, and Pte. Norman, who is at Bramshott, England, with the 109th Battalion.

went over the wall on the 15th September with fixed bayonets, gained 1,200 yards and their objective. Our casualties were heavy, 85 per cent. We were the leading wave of the advance, but had to be done at any cost. The sacrifices are terrible. The artillery shelled Hienie's lines for 8 hours, and when we got over to his lines his trenches were filled with dead, besides thousands laying out in the open, dead, dying and wounded. Some with limbs shattered and missing, and some men with nerves all gone from the bursting shells. Only 38 answered the roll out of 127 in my company. To collect the accounts from those who came through, of those who were missing, was by no means a pleasant task. No one can realize what is meant by battle, only those who participate, but believe me Fritz's is now realizing there are others taking part in the war now, besides himself. I wish she was over and everybody back home again. The day that peace is proclaimed turn the old tower bell loose It certainly will be a day of rejoicing. Speaking to a prisoner the other day, he told me he came from the States, and spoke very good English, and, his version was, that Germany would lose in time, but he says that Canada would only need to charter two boats to take home her remaining troops. I think old Kaiser Bill has them stuffed up to the ears.

Prisoners are coming in day and night, (all sorts) Germans, Saxons, Teutons, Wurtemburgers, Bavarians and big round headed Prussians, some of the latter are as big as Chief Thompson, but if they were only as kind hearted as they are stalwart they would not be such a hated race. They are the most treacherous adversary in the game and we never take a chance with them at all, and very few are taken prisoners. They will fight to a finish when they're cornered, and very few give up like the Saxons.

I have seen Archie McBride several times and he is looking good. He won the distinction of a military medal a little while ago. I also saw Ed. Graham and Harry Gamble, and Red Milligan, and Freddie, the Scraggs per. They are all well. It is nice to get together and talk of home and old times. Well, Chief, I hasten to assure you I am well under trying conditions. Hoping my letter finds you and your staff well and happy. Kindest regards to Mrs. Howard and Clifford. Thanking you for past favours, I remain,

Yours truly,

SAMUEL J. THOMAS.

The 77th Overseas Battalion

Placing the Colours of Ottawa's Unit in Westminster Abbey on Saturday, Sept. 23, 1916

By CANADIAN OVERSEAS

Placing the Colours of the 77th Battalion in Westminster Abbey on Saturday, Sept. 23rd, 1916.

All overseas battalions have one last service to perform before leaving British soil for the stern realities which called them from across the sea.—the duty of placing their colours in safe custody until the war is over.

On the morning of Saturday, Sept. 23, 1916, the colours (King's and Regimental) of the 77th Overseas Battalion from Ottawa, were placed for safe keeping in Westminster Abbey. Canada in England has a little corner in this, the most sacred spot in the British Isles; a spot which has been hallowed by centuries of worships and clothed in history from the dim past.

On June 17th, 1916, these colours were presented to 77th Battalion by General, the Honourable Sir Sam Hughes, Minister of Militia for Canada, on the eve of the departure of that battalion for overseas.

The colours, which are exceptionally fine, being the work of an Ottawa lady, were the gift of the President, directors and employees of the Ottawa Light, Heat and Power Company with which Col. Street has been connected for many years.

On the morning of Sept. 23rd, as the members of the 77th Battalion were crossing Westminster Bridge, London was just throwing off her mantle of yellow mist and the Abbey could be seen through a faint, mellow haze, softened by the sun.

The men marched through the arch in the Dean's building into the cloister green, where a photograph was taken. They entered the Abbey by the west cloister door and formed up in the nave. Here they were met by the Dean of Westminster, the Precentor, clergy and choristers and the procession passed up the nave to the chancel.

The tramp of feet echoed strangely through this dim, Gothic Temple of Silence, and stranger still, was the contrast of the white and red robes of the clergy and choristers and the khaki of the soldiers—emblems of peace and war.

The officers of the battalion with their colours, stood along the altar rail, while their pipe band, picturesque in its Highland regalia, lined the nave. After the short and impressive service had ended the colours were taken by the Dean and placed upon the Altar, afterwards being moved to Wolfe's Monument, alongside the colours of other Canadian [illegible]

[illegible] silence was broken by the wild organ pealing forth the notes of the National Anthem, while the soft voices of the choristers and [illegible] of the men [illegible] away and were lost down the long aisles of silence.

The procession marched back through the nave and the Dean addressed Col. Street and his officers and men. He expressed his pleasure at having these Canadian colours in Westminster Abbey and he assured them that they were in safe custody, and would be given back at the close of the war, to be returned to Canada.

Thus did the ceremony end and the men marched out of this historic Abbey, wherein sleep monarchs, sainted prelates, famous statesmen, renowned soldiers and illustrious poets. For an hour, time had turned back centurie, through the reigns of Edward the Confessor, the Tudors, the Stuarts and the Georges; to the world of Chaucer and other enchanters of the English tongue and to the England of Burleigh, Pitt, Fox, Burke and Wilberforce—names forever glorious.

This small band of Canadians left Westminster Abbey realizing that all this belonged to them and that they had added one more event to the history of this great chronicle of the lives of the British people.

The following members of the Battalion were present. Lt.-Col. D. -R. Street, Officer Commanding; Major and Bn. Lt.-Col. P. B. Taylor; Major H. W. Bowie; Major W. A. Cameron, Major Chas. E. Sutcliffe; the Hon. Capt. A. G. Acres, Capt. N. M. Halkett; Capt. J. C. Foy; Capt. S. O. Hall, Lieut. J. A. Harstone; Lieut. J. C. Huzzins, Lieut. J. H. V. Cameron; Bn. Sergt. Major S. H. Ogden; and about thirty of the N. C. O's with the Battalion Pipe Band.

The following guests were also present:

Lt.-Col. Stewart, O. C. 84th Bn., C. E. F.; Lt.-Col. Lang, O. C. 65th Bn., C. E. F.; Lt.-Col. Ketcheson, O. C. 80th Bn., C. E. F., Major Shotbred, O. C. 51st Bn., C. E. F.; Col. Harry MacLean of the Army Medical Corps; Lt.-Col. Johnston, O. C. 93rd Bn., C. E. F., and the Hon. Capt. J. H. Burnham, Paymaster of the 93rd Bn., C. E. F.

BISHOP O'BRIEN IN LINDSAY

LINDSAY, Oct. 16.—His Lordship Bishop O'Brien, of Peterborough, preached a very interesting sermon in St. Mary's Church at the conclusion of the forty-hour devotion which started last Wednesday.

"I am pleased," said His Lordship, "and it is a great satisfaction to me to see the excellent attendance which has been in evidence during the last three days. The forty-hour devotion has become famous and I hope that it will continue and that all who attended may go away spiritually and temporarily benefitted."

His Lordship dwelt upon the great benefits in a religious sense that are gained on such occasions and the many indulgences granted. "This devotion is an invitation from Christ to visit Him in the church, and it is a splendid manifestation of your love to do so. The way the devotion was attended was a demonstration of the faith of the congregation, and it was evident you have done your best to do it well. The result of this will be that you will take away, from this solemn devotion to the Holy Eucharist something that is permanent. Without it our church would be a mere temple. It might be a masterpiece of architecture, but a church without the real presence is practically dead. To take away the real presence you wipe out the Catholic Church for in it are all the graces which are desired for the faithful."

The speaker also dwelt upon the sacrifices as they were offered up in the old law. Those, he said, were of a material nature, but the church in offering up the sacrifice of the mass gives adoration to our Lord and is worthy of Himself. It is a supreme act of adoration offered up to the Eternal God.

The speaker also dwelt upon the perfection of the divinity as a reason why we should give Him acts of praise. "We should also thank Him for all graces received, and not be like the ten lepers, one of whom returned to give thanks to our Lord. God tells us that the people should be grateful. The sin of Adam was the cause of our misery and it was only through the crucifixion we could be restored to the favour of the Lord. So what thanks we should give to Him Who came to redeem and save us by His sufferings and death on the cross. All we have come from God and we should therefore never forget to thank Him. The effect of prayer was also dealt with His Lordship telling his people to ask what they wanted. Although the Almighty knows what we require it does not remove from us the obligation to ask and petition for those things which we are in need of."

A CHANCE TO HELP OUR BOYS AT FRONT

Baseball, Football, Lacrosse Supplies, Checkers, Chess, Dominoes, Mouth Organs Are All in Demand—Anything Out of Which the Boys Can Get Pleasure and Exercise.

Editor of the Examiner:

Dear Sir,—The Ontario W.C.T.U. in November 1914, became responsible for all the necessary money outlay in connection with the work of a Y.M.C.A. representative in France. In January of 1915, two such men were taken under our care. In all we have had five Y.M.C.A. representatives. Two of these—Capt. Oscar Irwin and Harry Whiteman—died France. A third was invalided home. We are now supplying all the needed support for Capts. Ed. Archibald and Charters Sharpe.

France.

Dear Mrs. Thornley,—I received the marked Testaments and the leaflets O.K., for which accept our hearty thanks.

Having been appointed to oversee the physical recreation and sports for the whole Canadian Corps, I am in position to use anything in the way of outdoor or indoor games—baseball, football, lacrosse, tennis, cricket, chess, dominoes, etc. etc.,—anything out of which the boys could get pleasure and exercise.

We have been having some very trying times lately and have lost a large number of our men. But there must be no pause in our service whatever the casualties.

Yours in the work,

EDWARD B. ARCHIBALD

No one can read the accounts of life at the front without realizing the intolerable strain under which our men live. Again and again Capt. Archibald and other Y.M.C.A. workers, have mentioned the absolute need for recreation and the soothing helpful influence of music and games.

In thousands of Canadian homes there are just such unused articles as Capt. Archibald needs. The boys have grown to men and gone their ways out into the world, and the once cherished flute or mouth organ or football, is lying away in some forgotten corner. Look for it, mother dear, and send it to us, that it may help those other brave lads to bear their almost intolerable burdens.

But if you should have nothing of the kind—perhaps the grandchildren have taken possession—and are still minded to help, you can send us the money to buy anything you designate. Should you decide to purchase yourself, please do not get several instruments when the money you expend would procure one article that would give real satisfaction. For instance, the 25 cents mouth organ is not to be compared with the 75 cent make in tone, range and durability. The key desired is L if that is procurable. Where the keys are alike or can be harmonized, trench concerts can be arranged.

And that box of dominoes, or the checker board or chess set—hunt them up and send them along to the City W.C.T.U. Headquarters, 422 Park Ave., London, Ontario, Canada where all the supplies for Capt. Archibald's work are gathered

Please do not forget the last two items of this address, for since the war began many a letter intended for this town has crossed the ocean.

As fast as enough material is received to fill a barrel, it will be shipped.

Both Capt. Archibald and Sharpe are anxious for Gospel portions. They can also use an unlimited quantity of the specifically prepared soldier's leaflets. These are daintily gotten up and $1.00 buys 50 copies. They carry the good news in winning language and attractive dress.

Hoping that those who can, may help promptly; and on behalf of the Ontario W.C.T.U., heartily thanking you, Mr. Editor for the space so kindly accorded, etc.

(Mrs.) MAY THORNLEY,
President W.C.T.U. Patriotic and Missionary Board.

5th Draft of Cobourg Heavy Battery Has Arrived in England

Major McKinnon, officer commanding the Cobourg Heavy Battery, telephoned the Examiner this afternoon that he had just received a cable from England, announcing the safe arrival of the 5th. Overseas Draft of the Cobourg Battery, which includes a number of Peterborough boys. Major McKinnon stated that he hastened to inform the parents of these boys that the voyage had been safely completed.

The Heavy Battery is now recruiting a new draft, with twenty men signed up already. They are all good fellows, and there is plenty of room for any others who desire to go overseas with one of the most attractive branches of the service.

An Interest Compelling Collection of New Becoming Hats

The Millinery Department has shown such continuous activity for the past month that we doubt if there is a single woman but who has not bought her first hat for Fall. Quite naturally, a great number have bought only their ready-to-wear hat, waiting until the season advanced and the last word in millinery fashions had become a certainty, before buying their dress hat.

So this is to announce a showing of the last word in Fall millinery fashions—an interest compelling collection of new, becoming hats at prices ranging from $3.75 to $20.00

AN UNSURPASSED VALUE:

Smart Stylish Trimmed Hats at $4.98

Perhaps the BEST hats in all the town at this price, for these are hats of the newer type. They are copies of very expensive models. You are asked to pay only their actual value in materials and labour; the cost of designing has been borne by the hats of higher cost. The shapes are not alone new and smart, but made on the best buckram, stronly wired and a superior quality of velvet used. Various new trimming ideas and trimmings. Enough shapes to make it possible to select a becoming model quickly.

Lloyds Insurance Takes a Drop

Special to The Examiner

LONDON, October 16.—The German submarine U-53 either has been sunk, captured, or returned to a German port, are the guesses made in shipping circles here to account for Lloyds' sudden reduction of Trans-Atlantic insurance from 40 to 20 shillings. It is assumed here that Lloyds' action was based on inside information of some sort.

SOCIAL AND PERSONAL

Miss Revell has returned to town, from a very pleasant visit to Rigaud, Montreal and Dorval.

The many friends of Mrs. (Dr.) Young, 305 Stewart Street, will regret to learn that she is ill and at present in Nicholls Hospital.

Mr. and Mrs. G. A. Rogers of Minden, Ont., are visiting at the home of their daughter, Mrs. E. A. Stinson, Chambers Street.

Brantford Courier: One of the prettiest and most enjoyable parties of the week was that given last Tuesday evening at the home of Mr. and Mrs. C. J. Winterbotham in Maplewood. Twenty-two guests were present and at 7 o'clock were seated at beautifully appointed tables where an elaborate our-course chicken dinner was served. Each table was adorned with a vase of Killarney roses and the place cards were prettily decorated. Immediately following the dinner each lady and gentleman was presented with a paper and pencil and they wrote recipes which were bound in a book sealed with cupids and presented to Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Stanton, of Peterborough, house guests of Mr. and Mrs. Winterbotham and who were recently married. Several other clever games were enjoyed, the last one being a moving picture stunt acted by several of the ladies, entitled "Love's Reward." This provoked much merriment. These were interspersed with Victrola music and a cornet solo by Mr. Jesse French. Dr. and Mrs. Charles Bond, of Richmond, and Mr. McFarland were present.

WEDDING BELLS

CARVETH—RUSSELL.

On Wednesday, Oct. 4th at Locust Farm, Douro, the home of Mr. George Russell, a quiet wedding took place when his eldest daughter, Isabella, was united in marriage to Mr. Walter Carveth of Hall's Glen. The bride, who was attired in a dress of white silk, entered the drawing room leaning on the arm of her father, to the strains of the wedding march, played by her sister, Ella. The Rev. H. Brown, of Warsaw, officiated.

After supper the happy couple left for their future home at Hall's Glen amid the congratulations of their friends. The groom's gift to the bride was a handsome pearl brooch and to her sister a signet ring.

FAULKNER—CALVERT.

A quiet but very pretty wedding took place on Wednesday evening, Oct. 11th, at Cedar Creek Farm, Ennismore, at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Thos. Calvert, when their daughter, Frances, was united in marriage to Mr. Fred. M. Faulkner, of Peterborough. The ceremony was performed by Rev. R. James, of Omemee, at six o'clock. The bride entered the drawing-room, to the strains of the Wedding March, played by H. James, of Omemee. She was supported by her father, who gave her away, and took her place under an arch of evergreen and the Union Jack. She was gowned in white silk, trimmed with silver lace and net, and wore a bridal veil, with orange blossoms, and carried a bouquet of white roses. After the ceremony and the signing of the register, the happy couple sat down to a dainty supper with a host of friends and relatives. The groom's gift to the bride was a beautiful silver butter dish, and to the organist a cameo ring. The bride's travelling suit was blue serge, with white satin hat. A very pleasant evening was spent, after which the happy couple motored to Peterborough with all good wishes, where they will take up their new home on Prince Street, where Mr. and Mrs. Faulkner will be at home to their friends after Nov. 1st.

J. M. GREENE MUSIC CO. IN DISPLAY CONTEST

Enter National Window Display Competition For $7500 in Prizes

Mr. John Morden, who has charge of the window dressing for the J. M. Greene Music Co., has high hopes of winning one of the Edison Week window display prizes. The prizes aggregate $7,500. Mr. Morden's window is attracting much attention. His background presents three canopied panels in each of which a New Edison machine is exhibited. The entire setting is beautifully garlanded with twining foliage and brightened by rare ferns. It is a striking window, and is particularly an Edison window. Prominently placed in the exhibit is a photograph of Thomas A. Edison over a folded Stars and Stripes, and some of the most vivid and meaty phrases from press references to the new Edison machines that re-create music catch the eye of the passing public. Not only is this Mr. Morden's window entry, but it serves to concentrate attention to Edison week and its significance to music lovers who have desired the best of the world's music rendered by artists in their own homes.

George St. Methodist Church Quarterly Board Sympathize With Mr. and Mrs. B. F. Ackerman In Loss of Their Son

At a special meeting of the Quarterly Board of the George street Methodist church, held yesterday after the morning service, the following resolution was passed:

Moved by D. W. Dumble, seconded by S. R. Armstrong:

Whereas in the fortune of war a son of our much respected citizen and official of this church, Mr. B. F. Ackerman, has surrendered his life on the battlefield in upholding the honour and integrity of our great British Empire, and whereas another son has already been sadly wounded on the battlefield in the same cause, we the officials representing George street Methodist church, unite in expression of sympathy with Mr. and Mrs. Ackerman in this their hour of sorrow.

Hearts of flesh under such circumstances must grieve, but life or limb surrendered in defence of one's country and for upholding of justice and honour leave a halo of glory to rest forever on the names of such sons.

We sorrow with you, we are proud of the noble sons who have brought honour to their parents, and to their city.

We commend Mr. and Mrs. Ackerman and family to Him who loved us and gave himself for us, and pray that in His loving arms you may realize Him as the comforter.

LONDON, Oct. 17.—Petrograd reports indicate that the Russians have arrived on the Dobrudja frontier and the enemy retreats forty miles. King Ferdinand of Rumania says the situation is excellent.

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

DANDRUFF SURELY DESTROYS THE HAIR

Girls—if you want plenty of thick, beautifully glossy, silky hair, do by all means get rid of dandruff, for it will starve your hair and ruin it if you don't.

It doesn't do much good to try to brush or wash it out. The only sure way to get rid of dandruff is to dissolve it, then you destroy it entirely. To do this, get about four ounces of ordinary liquid arvon; apply it at night when retiring; use enough to moisten the scalp and rub it in gently with the finger tips.

By morning, most if not all, of your dandruff will be gone, and three or four more applications will completely dissolve and entirely destroy every single sign and trace of it.

You will find, too, that all itching and digging of the scalp will stop, and your hair will look and feel a hundred times better. You can get liquid arvon at any drug store. It is inexpensive and four ounces is all you will need, no matter how much dandruff you have. This simple remedy never fails.

RUSSIAN ARMY READY TO HELP ROUMANIANS

And None Too Soon, For Hindenburg Has Gathered a Strong Teuton Force of Thirty-one New Divisions—Roumania, However, Has Large Fresh Body, and Salonika Offensive Has Started.

AN INGENIOUS DEVICE

(Special Cable By Rene Acros. Copyright)

LAUSANNE, Switzerland, October 17.—It is now announced that the main Russian army of 800,000 men is ready to take the field against the Bulgars. It is time, for the Germans are developing a powerful offensive. I am told Hindenburg himself is directing operations from a distance. Information verified from several sources shows that since September 1 the Germans have sent 12 divisions against General Brussiloff, in addition to 12 divisions despatched months ago. Of the last twelve divisions nine were used in the defence of Kovel, Vladimir, and Volynski.

For the defence of Kovel, Hindenburg concentrated some thirty-one divisions. When Roumania entered the war three German divisions were sent in part to Transylvania, in part to Dobrudja, while Austria sent seven divisions, of which six came from the Russian front, and one from Albania.

HINDENBURG'S INGENIOUS DEVICE.

Thus Austria now has on the Russo-Roumanian front forty-four divisions and Germany sixty-five. Moreover, there are ten German cavalry divisions and eleven Austrian. Hindenburg procured these reinforcements by the ingenious device of reorganizing divisions on a basis of three instead of four regiments, compensating for the reduction of effectives by increase tion points to German troops.

German newspapers claim the Roumanian army lost ten per cent. of effectives, but admit that the Roumanians have just formed forty new regiments, which have already made themselves felt.

OFFENSIVE FROM SALONIKA.

The long-prophesied offensive from Salonika seems at last to have begun. Serbs, English, French, and Russians already have won appreciable successes. The Germans admit retreating. The allies will probably have difficulty in taking Monastir, which is said to be surrounded with redoubtable fortified positions, as well as by mountains on which the Bulgars have established artillery. The distribution of the allied forces on the Macedonian front follows: Sector from Presp. Lake to a point north of Ostrovo Lake held by French, Russian, and Serbian troops; central sector around Lake Doiran confined to Italians, British, and certain other troops; Struma River sector held entirely by British.

In the Monastir region French and Russians are fighting on the left wing, forming the pivot of the offensive so vigorously carried out by the Serbs. The ground on the Bulgarian side is cut by numerous small torrents which aid the Bulgars. Their position is further strengthened by mountains on one flank and the River Cerna on the other.

The Italians continue to send troops to the Epirus, and already have occupied Santi Quaranta and Argyro Castro, and have landed fresh contingents at Pagania.

ADVANCE CLEARS WAY FOR SMASH AGAINST BASLEUX

Peronne's Doom Hangs in the Balance—From Three Sides British Pour Shells Into Hun Lines—Fine Weather Will See a New Drive on the Somme Line.

BRITISH ARTILLERY ACTIVE

NEW YORK, October 17.—A London cable to the Tribune says: Haig's troops have won fresh successes in the Thiepval region of the Somme front. Here the British are confronted by two great obstacles to an advance—the powerfully fortified Stuff and Schwaben redoubts.

After heavy artillery preparation, the British swung forward in this sector Saturday and advanced on both positions. North of the Stuff redoubt, two lines of German trenches were cleared for a distance of 200 yards. North and west of the Schwaben redoubt, the enemy was thrust back a considerable distance.

The Germans again adhered to the policy of abandoning ground in preference to losing men in great numbers. About 300 prisoners were swept behind the British ranks in the two movements.

BOTH NEAR CAPTURE.

Both of these machines in the German line now appear to be perilously close to capture. From dominating positions on the three sides of them, the heavy British guns are pouring a destructive fire that will soon pave the way for the conquering foot infantry. With the two redoubts in their hands the British will be able to sweep northward along the eastern side of the Ancre valley with little opposition, thus bringing Bapaume under attack from the flank.

ALSO AT GUEUDECOURT.

A slight advance was also made by the British Sunday morning to the northeast of Gueudecourt where the troops threaten Transloy from the north and thus force the evacuation by the Germans of their lines along the Bethune road between Sailly-Saillisel. Success in this movement would straighten out the allied front south of Bapaume and permit of an advance on both sides of the triangle at whose apex lies their objective.

BARLEUX NOW EXPOSED.

Few French successes since the beginning of the offensive promist more than that obtained in the vicinity of Belloy-en-Santerre. Both have an important bearing on the drive against Peronne from the south. Sunday's smashing advance by the French prepared the way for an attack on Barleux, the most formidably defended village in the region. Barleux is now exposed to attack on the north and west, and Foch's troops are pressing forward on the south in an effort to pocket it.

SEAL PERONNE'S DOOM.

With its fall, Peronne's doom will be virtually sealed. A general offensive movement on this front awaits only such a spell of dry days as occurred last fall. That the Germans underestimated the strength of the French forces and the driving power of their attacks is indicated by the capture of more than a thousand prisoners by the French in Sunday's operations.

The British colonial troops continue to harass the enemy with raids night and day. Sunday night the German trenches of Serre, Roclincourt and Neuve Chapelle, the defences were damaged, and prisoners were brought back to the British lines in small numbers. Aerial operations hampered by foggy weather and showers are expected to be resumed as soon as the skies clear up.

THE OLD STORE AT DOWNER'S CORNERS BURNED TO GROUND

Last night between twelve and one o'clock a red haze hung over the city in the clouds' reflection of the burning of the old store at Downer's corners, which has been occupied by Mr. A. W. Paskins, who also conducts an uptown grocery store at the corner of Hunter and Aylmer streets.

Shortly before midnight the family was awakened by the crackling of the incipient fire, which had apparently originated at the back of the storehouse, and by that time had made considerable headway. A strong wind was blowing and in a comparatively short time the whole building was wrapped in flames, which illuminated the surrounding country and sky over a wide area.

The store and residence were all under one roof and were completely wiped out, the entire building with its general stock and furniture. The general merchandise was valued at $4,000, on which Mr. Paskins had $1,500 insurance. The house was the property of Mr. Mat Carton and it is reported to be without insurance.

An Old Hotel.

The old Downer's Corners store was a landmark with a history that began beyond the memory of most of the present generation. According to legend, for that is about the correct term, it was at one time a flourishing hotel in the days of the old Cobourg railway. One gentleman estimated that it could not have been erected less than seventy years ago, and in that lengthy span has experienced a chequered career.

Part of the house was occupied by Mrs. Whalley whose husband joined the colours. A few pieces of her furniture were saved, but everything else was reduced to ashes with the old structure and its many memories.

The cause of the fire is believed to have been from mice nibbling at matches in the storehouse.

URIC ACID SUFFERING.

Uric acid is an accumulation of poison which finds lodgment in the system when the kidneys fail to remove it from the blood. In the kidneys and bladder it forms stones, in the joints and muscles it causes rheumatism. In any case the pain and suffering is almost beyond human endurance. Uric acid is promptly removed from the system when the kidneys are kept healthy and active by using Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills.

Von Hindenburg's Campaign Reported To Be Under Way

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

LONDON, Oct. 17.—Aiming to drive a wedge between the Russian and Rumanian armies the Austro-Germans have launched a great new offensive near the northwestern frontier of Rumania. Strong Teutonic forces, according to Petrograd despatches, are attacking the Russian front south of Bukowina, near a point where the Russians and Rumanians have joined hands. Every indication points to the beginning of Von Hindenburg's widely heralded campaign to crush Rumania. The Teutonic attacks have suddenly become more violent south of Kronstadt where Gen. Falkenhayn is trying to break through Predeal Pass.

In Dobrudja there has been no change in the situation in the past few days, according to official statements from the Russian, Rumanian, Bulgarian and German War Offices.

NATURALIZATION IN FRANCE.

New Regulations Suggested Creating More Difficulties for Foreigners.

PARIS, Oct. 14.—M. Rene Viviani, Minister of Justice and former Premier, has introduced a bill into the Senate, modifying the conditions for acquiring French citizenship.

According to existing regulations, persons born in France of foreign parents are entitled to French citizenship, provided they be domiciled in France when they come of age and have not formally renounced their claim. The disadvantage of this condition was that "undesirable" persons—that is, young people who had been convicted of offences during their minority—could and did make good their claims in spite of their past. By the terms of the new measure the claimant must show an uninterrupted residence of ten years on French soil and offer sufficient guarantees as to his character.

With regard to naturalization, more stringent measures are also proposed. A request for naturalization can only be made after attaining 21 years of age. A careful investigation will be made in each case, and naturalization will in no case be granted to persons who are enabled to retain their original nationality owing to special legal provisions of their native countries.

Special facilities will be accorded, however, to foreigners who have fought during the war either in the French or Allied armies. Naturalized persons will not be allowed to occupy public functions until ten years after their naturalization.

The new bill also provides that Frenchwomen who have married foreigners can reclaim French citizenship after a judicial separation, and not merely, as was the case heretofore, after the decease of their husbands or divorce.

No matter how hungry a man may be a single taste of defeat satisfies him.

GUM-CHEWING ABROAD.

Habit is Rapidly Taking Hold in the British Isles.

One of the minor horrors of war lamented by the conservative sort in England is the introduction of gum-chewing, remarks the New York Tribune. It is not known why the habit has suddenly gained in popularity, the population having hitherto resisted all efforts to force it on them. The Canadian soldiers are suspected of setting the fashion. Yet, "I am assured," says one authority, "that they have nothing to do with it." He points, however, to "the soldier's theory that it steadies the nerves."

But whatever the cause, there is no doubt about the fact; the leading manufacturers have figures to show that in half a year their monthly sales have risen from 3,000,000 to 20,000,000 bars, and gum is now issued as an army ration. If the habit be allowed to gain a secure footing in the army it is certain sooner or later to be taken up the civilian population, and, indeed, it is said to be well established already among munition workers.

Tungsten deposits which were discovered near Bishop, Cal., in 1913, are now being rapidly developed.

"THE LITTLE FORTUNE"

BY ARNOLD FREDERICKS

"I cannot tell you now. I have an idea regarding this case, and the one you found on the floor of the room up-stairs, that may, or may not be of value. We shall know later on. If my idea is the correct one, Mlle. Mercier would in all probability have been robbed of that coin within the next twenty-four hours. Come; we must hurry back to the hotel. My wife is on the track of a dangerous criminal. We must arrest him as soon as we learn his whereabouts. That I hope she will be able to tell us, but she cannot communicate with me except at the hotel. I am anxious to get there as soon as possible."

Mr. Morris concluded that he would go to his home at once. "I will meet you both at the office of the Trans-atlantic Line at ten o'clock to-morrow," he said. "You are to inform Mr. Germaine, then, I believe, whether or not M. Lefevre will take up this case."

"I imagine Mr. Germaine thinks there is no longer any case to take up," laughed Duvall.

"He won't, when he hears my story. I am determined to get to the bottom of this affair. I believe that Vernon was murdered, and that Mlle. Mercier has in some way been grossly defrauded; and if the Trans-atlantic people will not push the case, I will." He shook hands with his two companions and jumped into a taxi-cab.

Duvall and the prefect did the same. In a few minutes they had reached their hotel.

Grace had not yet returned, and Duvall began to feel anxious about her. It was now dark. He and the prefect sat discussing their plans for the following day.

A few moments later Grace came in. She seemed flushed and excited; her clothes were covered with dust, and her face discoloured by a large bruise.

Duvall sprang forward and took her hands. "What has happened, dear?" he asked.

"Oh, nothing much. I—I was knocked down."

"Diable!" exclaimed Lefevre excitedly. "This is shameful!"

"Tell us about it," said Duvall, a dangerous glint in his eyes.

"Well, as you went into the house I saw a man watching you through a window on the third floor. It was the room to which Grats and Hartmann had gone, but it was neither of them. This man was dark, pale, and clean-shaven, except for a dark moustache. The window was open and I saw him clearly."

"Yes, yes; it was Hartmann. He had taken off his beard. Go on."

"After a little while he came out, carrying a satchel. I saw that it was the same one that Hartman had carried. Then I became suspicious. The man walked to Broadway and took a car south. I took the same car. He watched me, for he seemed be afraid he might be followed, and he knew I got on when he did.

"He got off at Ninth Street. So did I. When he began to walk toward University Place, I followed. It is dark there. He stopped in the shadow of a stoop. I thought he had entered, and hurried up to see the number. When he stepped out suddenly and hit me in the face with his satchel. It knocked me down. When I got up he had disappeared. That's the whole story, and you see I'm a very poor detective. Anyhow, Richard, I'm glad the man got away. I don't want you to be bothering with cases of this sort any more, especially now that our dear M. Lefevre has come to make us his long-promised visit." She turned to the prefect. "You'd think Richard would be contended now that he has the farm he always wanted so much, but I can see that he is just aching to get back into harness. We won't let him, will we—at least not while you are here?"

Duvall laughed. "You'd better get after M. Lefevre," he said. "It's him they want, not me. They say I'm only an amateur."

Grace sniffed. "Absurd," she retorted. "Of course M. Lefevre, you know that I think Richard the greatest detective in the world. I'm his wife, you see. But I don't ask him to prove it. He's done so to my satisfaction often enough. And I hope that you are not going to get mixed up in any detective work during your visit. You must forget all about that sort of thing and come down home with us at once. I'm just dying to show you the chickens, and the dogs, and our garden, and everything."

"I have come three thousand miles to see them," said the prefect, bowing, "and yourselves. I assure you, my children, I am looking forward to a very happy month."

"And you won't take up any silly old cases for the Trans-atlantic Line?"

"M. Lefevre will decide that in the morning," said Duvall. "Just now we had better dress for dinner."

LOOK!

If you were told of a new discovery for the treatment of coughs, colds and bronchitis, as certain in its action on all chest troubles as anti-toxin is on diphtheria, or vaccination on small-pox, wouldn't you feel like giving it a trial?

Peps is the discovery!

Peps are little tablets, containing certain medicinal ingredients, which, when placed under the tongue, immediately turn into vapour, and are at once breathed down the air passages to the lungs. On their journey, they soothe the inflamed and irritated membranes of the bronchial tubes, the delicate walls of the air passages, and, finally enter and carry relief and healing to the lungs.

In a word, while no liquid or solid can get to the lungs and air passages, these Peps fumes get there direct, and at once commence their work of healing.

CHAPTER V.

Methods of M. Lefevre.

On the day following the arrival of the Richelieu, Mr. Germaine, managing director of the Trans-atlantic Line, sat in his private office in lower Broadway, smoking his after-breakfast cigar.

He had pressed a button a few minutes before, and presently there came into the room a tall, heavily built young man, whose clear eyes and ruddy complexion spoke of an active outdoor life.

"Did you receive at your hotel the cablegram that came for you yesterday afternoon?"

"Yes. Many thanks for your kindness in delivering it to me. It informed me that the man Reinhardt, who was killed at the Hotel Rochambeau yesterday, was the physician who attended Mercier during his last illness."

"Strange that I did not recognize him," said Mr. Morris.

"Scarcely. You saw him but once, and probably paid no particular attention to him. Then, too, he wore a small red beard at that time, which he afterward shaved off."

"Clearly there has been a plot against this young Mercier girl," Mr. Germaine remarked.

"Beyond question. And it is clear that she has been robbed of something of great value. To find out what it is, and restore it to her, is the task before me." The prefect took a match from Mr. Germaine's desk and lit his cigar. "I believe that I all I have to say at present."

"Mr. Barnes," said the managing director, indicating his companion, "is the chief detective of our line. We are obliged to employ several in and about the piers, to guard our property. Any assistance that he can give you is yours. He is at your service."

"Only too glad," murmured Barnes, much flattered.

M. Lefevre regarded Barnes with a curious smile, and began to draw on his gloves. "I am well acquainted with M. Barnes," he remarked. "By reputation, at least. If I am not mistaken, he was shot through the shoulder during the long-shoremen's strike last winter. I believe also that he has a pair of anchors tattooed in blue upon his left arm, near the elbow. Am I right, M. Barnes?"

The detective looked at M. Lefevre with bulging eyes. He instinctively gripped his left forearm. "Y-yes," he stammered, "you are; but how the devil—I beg your pardon—but how, on earth did you happen to know that, beats me."

"A mere trifle, my friend," replied the prefect carelessly. "We have an unusual complete system in my office in Paris. No doubt you would be even more surprised were I to inform you that you have three children, and that you salary is thirty dollars a week."

Barnes edged back in his chair as though he regarded the prefect's intimate knowledge of himself and his affairs as something supernatural.

Lefevre smiled pleasantly, then turned to Mr. Morris and Mr. Germaine, who had been regarding him with looks of astonishment. "I think I had better start out at once, gentlemen," he said. "There is no time to be lost. The police will also be in search of this fellow on account of the murder of Reinhardt. I should be sorry to have them forestall me."

"What evidence have they to work on?" asked Mr. Germaine.

"None, practically. They have not even a description of the man Hartmann as he appeared without his false beard. You will remember that neither Mr. Morris, Mr. Duvall, myself, nor the clerk at the Rochambeau saw him when he left the place. He apparently got away quite unobserved."

"But Mrs. Duvall saw him. I understand, and can describe his appearance accurately."

"Assuredly. In fact, she has already done so, although not to the police. I have so far secured that bit of information for my own use. I will advise you promptly, gentlemen, of any developments of importance. Good morning." He turned to Barnes. "Good morning, M. Barnes. If I require your assistance, I shall let you know. Pardon me if I suggest that your amethyst scarf-pin—the one your wife gave you—is on the point of falling to the floor." He waved his hand pleasantly to the three men and left the room.

"Now, how the devil did he know that the pin was given to me by my wife?" gasped Barnes vacantly, as he adjusted it to his neck-tie.

The others volunteered no explanations. "M. Lefevre is a remarkable man," said Mr. Germaine. "I am surprised that such a reputation and attainments should matter himself with a trifling matter of this sort." I was fully prepared for a refusal. A very remarkable man, indeed. Richard Duvall is a child compared to him. I consider that we are extremely fortunate to have the assistance of such unusually competent hands."

The prefect entered the automobile which stood at the entrance of the building, a broad smile upon his genial face. In the waiting machine was Grace Duvall.

M. Lefevre's account of his interview with the managing director of the Trans-Atlantic Line, and of his conversation with Barnes, seemed to cause her much amusement. At its conclusion she threw herself back in her seat and burst out laughing.

"You are a remarkable man, M. Lefevre," she said. "Richard is a mere amateur beside you."

Upon their arrival at the hotel the prefect was informed that Captain Wood, of the New York detective force, wished to see him. M. Lefevre received him in the parlor of his suite. He was a keen-looking, heartily built man, slightly past middle age, with a reddish-brown moustache.

"What can I do for you, monsieur?" the prefect inquired affably. "You have, perhaps, found this man Hartmann, the perpetrator of this brutal outrage?"

"No," the captain replied "we have not got him yet. As a matter of fact, we can't just figure this thing out. You, I am informed by the clerk at the hotel, examined the man's room shortly after his death. Who was the man that was murdered at the Hotel Rochambeau, and why was he killed? That's the first thing to determine. At present we can see no motive but robbery. His watch and money were missing."

"To your first question, monsieur, I will tell you this. The man was a Belgian, a physician practicing among the poorer classes in Paris. His name was Victor Reinhardt. He formerly wore a pointed red beard, but recently shaved it off. You, of course, know that he arrived here yesterday with his companion on the Richelieu."

"Yes. We know that. So he was a doctor, eh? And who was his companion, the fellow with the rheumatism?"

"That I am unable to tell you."

"Have you any idea of the motive of the crime?"

"Yes. It is my opinion that Hartmann killed his companion in a quarrel over a franc which they had jointly stolen."

"A franc?" You mean a one-franc piece?"

"Exactly."

The captain gazed curiously at his companion. "A one-franc-piece worth twenty cents! Impossible!"

Lefevre shrugged his shoulders. "That is my opinion, monsieur, for course I may be wrong."

"But there's no sense to it. What particular value did this coin have? Was it rare—valuable?"

"Not by any means rare. Here, in fact, is one precisely like it." The prefect drew from his pocket the coin which Mr. Morris had picked up in the room at the Hotel Rochambeau and handed it to his companion.

The captain examined it with great care, then handed it back. "Well, you may be right," he remarked helplessly, "but as for me, I can't make head or tail of the thing. There must be something back of it."

"Undoubtedly. I wish I could assist you further, but unfortunately I do not know myself just what the explanation of the affair is. Doubtless we shall find out later. You have not found any traces whatever of the murderer?"

"None. Seems to have disappeared completely.

"Well, captain, I wish you the best of success. If I can be of any service to you at any time, command me. Meanwhile I would suggest that you do not waste any time searching for a black-bearded man with the rheumatism."

The captain opened his eyes in astonishment. "We are informed by the clerk at the Hotel Rochambeau, as well as by the officers of the steamer, that Reinhardt's companion was an elderly man with a black beard, so rheumatic that he was scarcely able to walk."

TATTOO CRAZE IN ENGLAND.

Rich and Poor Have Taken Up the Fad.

A craze for tattooing is sweeping England. Both rich and poor have taken up the fad.

To-day there is hardly a society man or woman who does not bear some indelible emblem.

When war was declared and the manhood of England rushed to the colours, a number of tattooists opened little shops in working-class districts and started tattooing the names of their customers on their arms for the small sum of six cents. Originally this was done as a precaution, as they could be identified in case anything happened to them at the front. The craze soon spread.

Some bashful youths propose through having the names of their Dulcineas tattooed on their wrists. This strange method of love-making was described by a "professor," who at one time used to practise at Coney Island.

But "I love sweet Lily Smith," and a youth will say, "on me, where everyone can see it." He lays down six cents and the job is done.

Then he puts his hand on a counter or somewhere, where Lily can see it, and if she wants to accept him she comes to the tattoo expert and has "I love brave Jack Jones" tattooed on the back of her hand and lets Jack read it. That breaks the ice and the courtship proceeds.

The New York hop crop is this year full of promise. In several recent years growers suffered heavy losses from blight.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

A SCRAP OF PAPER

A Story For Thanksgiving.

By RUTH GRAHAM

Edward Olcott was convalescent, and the morning was a marvel of sunshine. There is a delicious feeling about first convalescence that I fancy is explainable from the contrast between suffering and the relief from suffering. It seemed to Olcott that he was never so well in his life, and yet it would have been well nigh impossible for him to get out of the invalid chair in which he had been wheeled to the glass inclosed porch of the hospital.

He had not been there long before an attendant dropped a newspaper in his lap. Unfolding it, he noticed some words written in pencil in a woman's hand on the margin. They read:

Dear Patient—I am very sorry for you. I hope you will get comfort from this paper, which I intend to put in the box at the terminal of the railroad for papers to go to the hospitals. I pity you especially being confined on account of illness when Thanksgiving is coming on. Cheer up! On next Thanksgiving day I trust you will be in condition to enjoy a fine Thanksgiving dinner.

This communication to an unknown dear patient was signed with two initials, E. A. The newspaper was a weekly issued at a place called Edgewater, some twenty miles from the city.

"That little note," said Olcott to himself, "was written by a girl. No one else would have signed her initials. The place in which she lives is made up of residences of well to do people. I question if in all there are 300 houses. I shall have no difficulty in discovering who E. A. is, and I propose to dine with her next Thanksgiving. I would do so this year but for the fact that there isn't time and I couldn't eat a Thanksgiving dinner."

Olcott was a young man of means. The reason why he was at a hospital instead of his own home was twofold—first, he was a bachelor, without a near relative, and, second, he had been recommended by his physician to go to a hospital as the most convenient place in which to be ill. Possibly in his convalescent state he was especially impressible. Be that as it may, he read the paper that had been given him, conjuring up visions of the person who wrote the message on the margin. When he had finished the paper's perusal he tore off the message for preservation and future use.

Olcott was at an age when an appreciation for the pleasures of social life begins to lose its edge. When he was twenty he fancied that he was courted because of his attractiveness. Now that he was twenty-seven he had come to understand that he was courted principally for what his income represented. He had not lived at home since the death of his mother, when he was nineteen. His illness, during which he had been under the care of paid nurses, had made him sensible of what might be the tender solicitude of one who loved him. Sundry young ladies he had met in society had endeavored to make it appear to him that they appreciated him for himself, but he believed that any other man who could give them a home would do as well.

For these reasons he was attracted to this person who had a heart to take in an unknown person in a hospital from whom there was scarcely a possibility that she could derive any benefit.

She might possibly be old and homely, but he did not believe she was. At any rate, as soon as he was discharged from the hospital he proposed to hunt her up—that is, if she lived in Edgewater. If not, there was not much hope of finding her.

When the next Thanksgiving season came round Olcott had made the acquaintance of Miss Edith Arnold of Edgewater and had proved by securing a specimen of her handwriting that she was the person who had contributed the newspaper that he had read as a convalescent. There had been no great difficulty in this. All he had to do was to go to Edgewater, join a club there, consisting of young men and women, make the acquaintance of the residents and look out for a girl whose initials were E. A.

Miss Arnold was, as he had supposed, very young. She was barely eighteen. Olcott paid her a great deal of attention, at which she was naturally flattered. He discovered that her heart was as tender for the afflicted as he had supposed, and it was not long before he had won that heart for himself.

All this while he had the pencil message that he had torn from the newspaper in his portmanteau. But he said nothing about it to Miss Arnold, who supposed that their meeting had occurred by chance. Olcott had resolved when in the hospital that he would eat his next Thanksgiving dinner with her, and he was working up to that point. This, too, was very easy, for a few weeks before Thanksgiving he asked her to be his wife, and she accepted his proposition. Under the circumstances it was quite in order that he should be invited to take his Thanksgiving dinner at the Arnolds'. Toward its close he took from his portmanteau the scrap he had torn from the newspaper and passed it around the table. It was easily recognized as Edith's work. Then Olcott said:

"When ill in a hospital I tore this message of sympathy from a newspaper that fell into my hands. I vowed that I would eat my next Thanksgiving dinner with the writer, and I have kept my resolve."

To Write Kitchener's Life.

The task of writing the life of Lord Kitchener has been entrusted to Sir George Arthur, Bart., the late War Secretary's personal secretary at the War Office. He is to have the co-operation and advice of Lord Derby, who was one of "K. of K.'s" most intimate friends. It will be months before this exhaustive and authoritative work is published. Thousands of documents and private letters will have to be read and selected. Sir George Arthur, however, is well fitted for this tremendous task. This is not his first attempt at authorship. He is an accomplished writer as well as soldier, and his two volumes on "The Story of the Household Cavalry" prove him to be highly qualified for the writing of the life of one of the most eminent soldiers and diplomats of our history.

British and German Naval Prisoners.

Dr. Macnamara, replying in Parliament to Mr. Ashley, who asked if he would state how many German naval officers and men had been taken prisoners by us, and how many of ours had been captured by the Germans, said the figures were as follows: German, 136 officers, 2,054 men; British (including Royal Marines), 45 officers, 364 men.

These figures were exclusive of the officers and men of the Royal Marines and Royal Naval Division taken prisoners in land operations.

Ellen Terry Filmed.

Ellen Terry made her debut as a screen actress recently in a pretty little village somewhere within 25 miles of London. She is appearing for the Ideal Film Company in a play in which she takes the role of a retired actress and queen of the village. All sorts of country scenes will figure in the picture, among them being the village crowd, a maypole dance, and a Punch and Judy show.

It looks as if Bernard Shaw will loom up large in one of the scenes. Dressed in knickerbocker suit and cap, he mixed with the village crowd and most likely got himself on to the film. He was delighted with the maypole scene, and afterward declared that he might write a film play himself.

It is said that Ellen Terry has stipulated that the film shall not be publicly exhibited if it does not meet with her approval.

HE OPPOSED CONSCRIPTION.

Hon. Bertrand Russell is Having a Hard Time in Britain.

The path of those who oppose conscription in Great Britain just now is not one that is strewn with roses, as the Hon. Bertrand Russell, only brother and heir-presumptive of Earl Russell, has lately been finding out. Some three months ago this aristocratic pacifist was fined $500 and costs, with the alternative of sixty-one days' imprisonment, in respect of a leaflet written by him in defence of those who object to serve in the British army. He is a prominent member of the so-called "No-conscription" Fellowship—a body which includes a number of well-known "cranks." Several members of Parliament belong to it, including Messrs. C. P. Trevelyan, Arthur Ponsonby, Philip Snowden, and Ramsay Macdonald. Naturally its tenets are not looked on with favor by the Government which has its hands full in enforcing conscription.

Mr. Russell has written a book called "Justice in War Time," in which he advocates an early peace without any serious weakening to any of the great powers involved, and the formation for the future of a central world government, "able and willing to secure obedience by force." In the course of this volume he admits that "no doubt atrocities have occurred on both sides," but seeks to discredit the authenticity of some of the cases mentioned in the report of Lord Bryce. Such views are not very acceptable to the Government, nor are they very popular in circles other than Governmental.

In fact, they are almost making a martyr of Mr. Russell. He has been stripped of his Cambridge fellowship—he had a distinguished university career. His London flat was, recently, he avers, visited by Scotland Yard officers and searched from top to bottom—an indignity which he bitterly resents. He has been appointed to a professorship at Harvard University, but is not allowed to leave England to enter on his professional duties, the authorities apparently not desiring that his peculiar views both on war and peace should be disseminated in a neutral country by an Englishman.

On the first of this month he was served with the following notice: "I, Lieut.-Colonel the Hon. A. F. V. Russell, being a competent military authority under the Defence of the Realm Regulations, do hereby order that the Hon. Bertrand Russell shall not, except with permission in writing from me, or from some other competent naval or military authority, reside in any area specified as a prohibited area by virtue of any order now or hereafter made under the Aliens' Restriction Act, 1914."

About this notice there is certainly something dramatic. For the orderer and the orderee—Col. A. F. V. Russell and Mr. Bertrand Russell—happen to be cousins. Both are descended from the sixth Duke of Bedford. Mr. B. Russell is the grandson of the great statesman Earl Russell, better known as Lord John Russell, who was twice Prime Minister.

Pneumatic Man-Catcher.

Experiments with a new life-saving device are being made by the London General Omnibus Company. It consists of a pneumatic tube quite 6in. in diameter, placed a few inches above the ground before the front wheels. When a person is caught the tube flattens, touches the ground, and pushes the obstacle in front of it. The experiments have been highly successful with "men" made of sawdust.

She Wondered.

An old couple had come up to London on a short holiday, and while looking around one day they saw over a shop a sign which read:

"Pohnsam's Shirt Store."

"Well, I declare," said the old lady. "I wonder who tore it and what he tells people about it for? Can't his wife mend it?"

It is said that American munition workers are drawing as much as £200 to £120 weekly. One hundred dollars equals £20 16s 8d, and it is not surprising to hear that many of them are buying motor-cars. It was recently mentioned in court that British munition-workers sometimes earn £500 a year.

Few Potatoes For Germany; Harvest Fails

Batocki Tells Reichstag of Serious Food Situation.

AMSTERDAM, Oct. 16.—President Von Batocki, of the Food Regulation Board, admitted in the Reichstag that the potato harvest in Germany had been disappointing, according to the Kolnische Volkszeitung, stating that the shortage was due to a lack of seed potatoes left over from last year.

President Von Batocki, the despatch adds, stated that the authorities were taking counsel on steps deemed necessary, and in the meantime all trade in seed potatoes would be forbidden.

RUSSIA ORDERS 1,000 LOCOMOTIVES IN U. S.

NEW YORK, Oct. 14.—Contracts for 1,000 locomotives it is reported have finally been placed by the Russian Government with American shops. In turn the locomotive builders have placed contracts for a little over 100,000 tons of steel plates, bars, shapes and forgings, most of which business is understood to be the exercising of options given some time ago.

The heavy demand for locomotive boiler tubes continues, some manufacturers having sold their entire output for delivery up to March, 1917. One of two of the smaller mills, which have a harvest in making sales at higher prices for this year's delivery.

MOONLIGHT AIDS AVIATORS.

Under the caption 'Bomb Dropping at Dawn,' the British Official Press Bureau has issued an article in which an officer of the Royal Flying Corps tells of the work of the British airmen on the French front.

Bomb-dropping raids, the officer writes, take place at all hours of the twenty-four, but the majority of the raids are arranged for the period of darkness just before dawn. That arrangement gives the raiders a chance to reach their objective without being spotted by the enemy, and of having daylight to help them find the way home again.

The Intelligence Officer, after bitterly complaining against people for coming in ones and twos instead of in a batch, so that he has to say the same thing several times over, proceeds to business. "The pla e you have to bomb is Z—better go out to sea first and then cross the coast at Y and carry on till you strike the canal.

"It's your turn. The chocks are pulled away and the tail released. Both throttles wide open, the joystick (the universal name for the control lever) is right forward, and you're off in the darkness.

"Moonlight is a powerful friend to the pilot for two reasons, first, because even as low as 300 feet are invisible, but the pilot can see clearly; second, because in the moonlight a searchlight is useless, the beam of light offers no contrast, and seems to die away almost when it starts.

"Searchlights must be avoided if possible, since the guns frequently swing with the searchlight, and the gunner has only to fire along the beam. Also, when the beam of light strikes the machine it dazzles the pilot so that he can see nothing. Suddenly an unnoticed beam swings on the machine, but a rapid turn and dive gets it out of danger before they have time to fire or to bring the light of a second beam into action.

"There are sheds, dimly visible as black rectangular blotches. It has taken ages to find them. A glance at the altimeter shows 1,500 feet; the petrol is shut off. Now the glide starts, 1,200, 1,000 in large, wide spirals; an occasional glance at the sheds, a sharp look-out for searchlight beams, but always an eye on the altimeter—800, 700, 600, 500, petrol off.

"The searchlights are busy again; they can hear you, but it's neck or nothing. Out from the sheds to get the line and then the final trip. Closer and closer. Right hand on the bomb release, then judging the angle—let go one, two—both bombs away. From 500 feet a bomb takes five or six seconds. Still looking over the side you see them—two tremendous flashes—and then down goes her nose—a sharp right bank and out to sea.

"Sauntering gently back to breakfast, flying low over the sands, both engines going well, a fine morning, and a sense of having done a job of work."

ZAM-BUK

THE DYING HERO

On a thickly crowded battlefield,
Where the dead were strewn around,
One poor lad lay, on his shield,
On the cold and frosty ground.
And his comrades lay around him,
As the guards with a lantern dim
Were separating the dead and wounded
And bringing the suffering in
A proud and stately mansion
That stood, secluded and shielded
From the wrath of Germany's guns.

As they lifted the dying soldier,
From off the cold ground and shield,
He smiled a smile of thanksgiving
As they carried him from that field.

For he knew the Germans would come to plunder
Before the guards had time
To carry the dead and the living
From off the cold, cold ground.
And he thought of all his companions
As they carried him in with the rest,
And laid him in the mansion
On a nice clean bed to rest

And as he lay there in agony
He imagined he could see, his sweetheart
And his poor mother, old and gray,
Praying for the lad who was fighting,
And wishing they would see him again some day,
For he knew as they were praying,
And on his death bed he was laying,
That the fight was still surging on.
And his brothers, and all his companions
Were taking revenge on the Germans,
And he knew the Kaiser was wishing
He would of let peace reign.

But his wishes have come, too late.
And now, he will have to leave it, to fate,
To say which is the best country
And which one is going to win,
For he thought his was the best army,
And he was going to win without harming
His own dear son-in-laws,
Who are now under the ground.
And I guess that he is shaking
When he thinks of the English taking
His country and Fatherland so dear.

And as that soldier laying dying,
With a nurse beside him standing,
Bathing his wounds and scratches
To ease the pain e'er he died,
He smiled up at her and catches
An answering smile, so he asks her
To write a line to his mother,
And his little sweetheart who watches
For a word from him, who is lying,
there almost dead.
So the Red Cross nurse smiles gayly
When she tells him she writes daily
For the lads who are sick in bed.
And then she writes to his mother
And tells her he won't recover
For he was wounded badly,
In the head and in the body,
And then she writes to his sweetheart
And tells her not to lose heart.
But pray for her lover who is dying
And, who is almost crying
To see once more his darling,
And his poor mother old and gray.

And as she finishes his short letters,
He feels life's short fetters

Slowly but surely slipping
As he bids his last farewell.
When he feels his last breath ebbing
He grasps the nurse's hand
And closes his eyes never to open again
In this hard and cruel world.
And the nurse then covers him over,
And leaves his bed, to go over
To tell the sergeant commanding
Thaat another hero has gone to his rest.

And as his mother and sweetheart
Receive the letters of his last farewell,
And a letter from the nurse
Telling them of the one they loved so well,
They feel as if their hearts were breaking,
And how much they miss him they can never tell,
But they knew he died a hero,
Receiving his death wounds fighting
For to save his loved ones from destruction
By the Germans' cruel, cruel guns
And now they pray for protection
And that they will meet him in heaven
Before they are killed by the cruel Huns

Now I wonder, when this cruel war is ended
If half the broken hearts will be mended,
And if the poor mothers who lent all their sons
To their country who needed them all
Will some time, in the near future,
Receive some kind of atonement
For her lads, who were made fall,
For the Germans who heeded no one at all,
Surely she won't have to just pine
For her brave lads who fell in their line.

But I guess the King don't forget,
And he thinks with many a regret
Of the sorrow and suffering
His people are now enduring
Over the loss of their sons, and sweethearts
Who fought to the very last.
And I guess he is suffering in his own heart
When he thinks of his son who took the German spy's part
And saved him from the Canadian's

So let us help that poor lad's father
Who is king of our own dear country,
And sympathize with all the fathers
Who have sons that are heroes, too,
For isn't it nice for a mother
When her friends call on her,
To say to them, I have a hero
Who have his life to his kind and country,
But I often wish he would of been spared
When I think of the enemies who ever dared
To kill my poor, poor boy.

So now we will end our story
'Cause the poor lad wasn't a bit sorry
To give his life and freedom
To his king and country's call.
And you bet he thought of his loved ones,
When he was helping to have the battle won
By his own Canadian chums,
So I guess now as we are leaving,
We will think of the lads who are sleeping,
And the ones who are still fighting
As hard as when they heard the first call.

MEAT INJURIOUS TO THE KIDNEYS

Take a Tablespoonful of Salts If Back Hurts or Bladder Bothers

We are a nation of meat eaters and our blood is filled with uric acid, says a well-known authority, who warns us to be constantly on guard against kidney trouble.

The kidneys do their utmost to free the blood of this irritating acid, but become weak from the overwork; they get sluggish; the eliminative tissues clog and thus the waste is retained in the blood to poison the entire system.

When your kidneys ache and feel like lumps of lead, and you have stinging pains in the back or the urine is cloudy, full of sediment, or the bladder is irritable, obliging you to seek relief during the night; when you have severe headaches, nervous and dizzy spells, sleeplessness, acid stomach or rheumatism in bad weather, get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Glass of water before breakfast each Jad Salts; take one tablespoonful in a morning and in a few days your kidneys will act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate clogged kidneys, to neutralize the acids in urine so it is no longer a source of irritation, thus ending urinary and bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is inexpensive and cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink, and nobody can make a mistake by taking a little occasionally to keep the kidneys clean and active.

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

MISS' AND SMALL WOMAN'S DRESS.

By Anabel Worthington.

The more consideration a woman gives to the styles in one piece dresses the more firmly she becomes convinced that the most satisfactory dress is the one designed on simple, youthful lines, so that to suit occasions the result may be achieved by adding the necessary detail features.

In the illustration is shown a dainty little frock in which tucks are used to advantage for the youthful effect. The waist is shaped with a tuck in each shoulder edge and is bloused quite full over the skirt; the front closing is with buttons. The designer has met the needs of novelty in the outline of the collar, using contrasting goods around its edge to give it full merit, and the full length sleeve is gathered into a cuff that harmonizes with the collar.

The full gathered skirt, with three downward turning tucks, is joined to a straight girdle in contrasting color where the waist meets it. The tucks may be omitted and a vest or chemisette may be worn with the waist or a frill or jabot added.

Silk, poplin, linen, serge and alpaca, which is offered in its new weave, so much like silk, will be admirable for such model as this.

The pattern, No. 7,958, is cut in sizes 14, 16 and 18 years. To make in size 16 will require 6⅛ yards of 36 inch material. ⅛ yard 18 inch goods to trim, allowing for tucks; without tucks, 5⅛ will be plenty.

You may obtain the pattern by sending [illegible] to the office of this publication.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required, and age of a child.

Price 15 cents, or 2 for 25 cents.

REMOVE THE ONUS FROM CLERGYMAN

"Guilty or Innocent" Hard to Decide.

ST. LOUIS, Oct. 16.—Discussion of the proposal to enact a church law forbidding a clergyman to perform a re-marriage ceremony regardless of the question of the supposed "guilt" or "innocence" of a man or woman, divorced persons, was resumed at Saturday's session of the House of Deputies of the triennial convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church.

The proposed canon recommended in the report of a commission appointed at the last general convention has attracted widespread interest. Speakers arguing for its adoption, generally conceded that no legislation of the church can put an end to re-marriage, but asserted that the proposed law would help the church to live up to its marriage service which binds a man and a woman "until death do us part." It was pointed out that the present canon, providing that clergymen shall not solemnize a marriage for a divorced person unless he or she was the "innocent" party to the divorce, impose a difficult problem on the clergy, particularly where a divorce is believed to have been obtained by actual collusion.

Other deputies urged that adoption of the proposed canon would drive Christian men and women out of the Church. It was asserted the problem is one which must be dealt with in present day methods and not "in the methods of a century ago."

A Summary Of Market Conditions

Canned Goods Will Be Higher. The Market Situation for the Week.

The following comment on the market situation as regards food stuffs appeared in Canadian Grocer this week

There is every reason to expect that the new prices to be named by Canadian canners will be 75 per cent. in advance of the opening prices of last year. It is asserted in some quarters that not more than 50 per cent. of orders for tomatoes and corn will be delivered. There will be no 3-lb. cans of tomatoes packed this year, the pack being practically all 2 1-2 lbs. Canned pumpkins will be off the market. Peaches have been a fair crop, but will be slightly higher than last year.

Canned pork and beans will probably open somewhere near the price of last year. The Ontario crop has been a fair one, and the importation of Japanese and Indian beans has had a steadying influence on the local market. The price of cans and sugar are higher than last year and have had a tendency to increase prices.

There is a firmness in the sugar market that to some looks like another advance in Canadian refined. The big preserving season is practically over and this may have a tendency to hold down prices. Flour holds firm with small prospects in sight for lower prices in the immediate future. In fact, it is asserted by some that even higher levels will be reached.

Live hogs have declined in price. Cooked meats are down about 1c lb.

Common grades of tea are firmer and Ceylon teas have advanced 1c lb. Coffees are firm with an improved demand.

There has been a heavy demand this year for pickling spices of all kinds. Reports from California indicate that the raisin crop has been damaged to a considerable extent by heavy rains. Some late reports state that the damage is not as heavy as was at first anticipated. In the meantime prices have been withdrawn.

There is a good demand for rice and tapioca. Prices are holding firm at present, but there will probably be cheaper tapioca in the future when new stocks arrive.

Butter, cheese and eggs are firm and prices are gradually climbing the ladder.

There is a good demand for all kinds of fish, and higher prices have been asked for some varieties this week.

Business generally is good throughout Canada, despite the high prices of foodstuffs which now prevail.

Prices are still soaring upwards and advances have been recorded this week on tin, solder, files, screen wire, fish lines, tire and stove bolts, iron rivets and burrs, crow bars, galvanized sheets, squares, hammers, bevels, vises, screw and strap hinges. Prices on washing machines have been withdrawn. A new and higher list, it is understood is being prepared. In the meantime prices are quoted only on application. The demand for steel is as insistent as ever.

The United States Steel Corporation this week reported unfilled orders aggaregating 9,522,584 tons on the books of the subsidiary companies at the close of business September 30. This is a decrease of 137,773, tons during the month of September. The total shipments last month are estimated to have been 1,060,000 tons. If the subsidiary companies had been able to handle all the business offered, the sales would no doubt have been greater than the record sales of March, 1916.

The linseed oil market is holding steady. White lead in oil is very firm, and mixed paints as a result of high prices on oil and white lead are exceedingly firm.

Business in hardware lines is good and there is a fairly heavy demand for all seasonable lines despite the unprecedented high prices now prevailing. The only decline noted this week is in poultry netting for spring booking.

GIRL STEALS MONEY IN ORDER TO ELOPE

OTTAWA, Oct. 16. — Marjorie Dancy, cashier in Bryson-Graham, Ltd., created quite a sensation by absconding with $85 belonging to her employers, and attempting to elope with Sergt. Lucian Richer, of the 230th Battalion.

The pair were arrested at the Central Station, as they were about to board a train bound for Montreal. Richer was liberated shortly after his arrest, but now the military authorities are searching for him, as a deserter from the ranks.

Miss Dancy, a girl of 17 years of age, had been in the employ of Bryson-Graham Ltd., for several months. As she was handling the cash it was an easy matter for her to obtain the money which she is charged with stealing.

When she did not return from lunch an investigation was made, and it was ascertained the money was missing. Then the telephone burred for a time. The police were notified and the Grand Trunk and C.P.R. police were also asked to be on the look-out for Miss Dancy.

The couple arrived at the station just as the train was about to pull out, and they were arrested before they were able to board the train.

The case was tried in Police Court and Miss Dancy was allowed out on suspended sentence. Her employers pleaded for leniency.

WARSAW'S HEROES

Little Warsaw tho' so humble,
And before unknown to fame,
Now upon the roll of honour
Well a worthy place may claim.
And amid the very proudest,
Full as proud can lift her head,
For on duty's rugged pathway
Her brave sons right nobly tread.

When the Hun flung down the challenge
And the trump of battle blew,
Quick they buckled on their harness
Volunteered, as heroes do,
Soon the men of little Warsaw
By the Indian River's banks,
With the hardy boys of Dummer
Khaki clad, were in the ranks.

Middleton, of martial mettle,
Akins, Selkirks, Twain and Crowe,
Cooper, Cridlands, fearless Wilson,
Stern as ever faced a foe.
Wason, too, tho' but a stripling
Answered to his country's call,
Millar, Lowry, stalwart Calder,
Loyal patriots, each and all.

Well may little Warsaw glory
In her gallant soldier sons,
Who have crossed the rolling ocean
To far France to fight the Huns;
Grateful she will remember
Those their lives who nobly gave
For their country, and are sleeping
I na distant, gory grave.

Brace Carveth, his name is written
Deathless on his country's heart,
In a distant, gory grave.
Valiantly he bore his part.
Made the sacrifice ungrudging,
That our hearths and homes might be,
And faith our fathers died for
From the Teuton tyrant free.

For our dear loved sons and brothers
We will breathe each hour a prayer,
That the Father bid His angels
Keep them in their watchful care.
In the camp, or periled trenches
May quit them like true men,
And the God of battles shield them
Bring them safely home again.

The Folly of Taking Digestive Pills

A Warning to Dyspeptics.

The habit of taking digestive pills after meals makes chronic dyspeptics of many thousands of men and women because artificial digestents, drugs and medicines have practically no influence upon the excessively acid condition of the stomach contents which is the cause of most forms of indigestion and dyspepsia.

The after dinner pill merely lessens the sensitiveness of the stomach nerves and thus gives a false sense of freedom from pain. If those who are subject to indigestion, gases, flatulence, belching, bloating, heartburn, etc., after eating would get about an ounce of pure bisurated magnesia from their druggist and take a teaspoonful in a little water after meals there would be no further necessity for drugs or medicines because bisurated magnesia instantly neutralizes stomach acidity, stops food fermentation and thus insures normal, painless digestion by enabling the stomach to do its work without hindrance.

SCOTLAND YARD SEES BOGUS HEROES

LONDON, Oct. 14.—Scotland Yard has organized a special staff to round up bogus "heroes". The King's uniform has been abused to a greater extent than has been supposed. The military authorities saw the danger some time ago, and made an effort themselves to deal with it, but the assistance of Scotland Yard was found to be desirable, and now a strict lookout is kept for adventurers in military guise. Every day the organisation grows more effective, and nobody can perpetrate a fraud of the kind with a feeling of impunity. Impostors trying to take advantage of the public generosity now find it very difficult to pursue their contemptible methods. What Scotland Yard is doing, the provisional police are also intent upon.

Embarrassing Hairs Can Be Quickly Removed

(Beauty Culture)

Hairs can be easily banished from the skin by this quick, painless method: Mix into a stiff paste some powdered delatone and water, spread on hairy surface and in 2 or 3 minutes rub off, wash the skin and it will be free from hair or blemish. Excepting in very stubborn growths, one application is sufficient. To avoid disappointment, buy the delatone in an original package.

The British Troops Widen The Extent Of Their Operations

General Haig's Men Enter Enemy Trenches North of the Ancre Last Night---Capture of Thiepval Opened the Way for Operations in That Direction---French Occupy Houses in Sailly---A New Note Handed to the Greek Government.

A SUMMARY OF TO-DAY'S WAR CABLES

LONDON, October 17.—British troops extended the Somme offensive north of Ancre Brook last night and entered enemy trenches west of Serre, General Haig reported this afternoon. Since the first day of the offensive, when the British drew their lines close to Serre, and then were driven back, there has been no fighting on this front. The Germans holding a strong position at Thiepval made it inadvisable for the Allies to extend their operations further north. The capture of Thiepval opened the way for a widening of the front.

NEW NOTE HANDED TO GREEK GOVERNMENT

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

ATHENS, (via London, delayed), October 17.—The Exchange Telegraph correspondent here learns authoritatively that a new note in the form of an ultimatum of extremely grave character has been handed to the Greek Government by Vice-Admiral Fornet, Commander of the Anglo-French fleet in the Mediterranean. King Constantine has returned to the Capital from his residence at Tatoi since the note was presented. French and Italian marines with machine guns have been placed in charge of the railway station, municipal buildings and other meeting places in Athens and Pireaus. The population is quiet and expectant.

The Somme Drive Is Only a Tap

NEW YORK, October 17.—"British military heads are absolutely certain that they will break the German lines by next spring and get out into the open," said Sydney Brooks, the English writer, who arrived aboard the Orduna. The Somme drive, Brooks described as "only a gentle tap to let the Germans know we are waking up."

"When I left England people were still congratulating themselves on Mr. Lloyd George's straight from the shoulder statement to the United Press," he said. "What he said, every single Englishman was thinking and feeling."

PETROGRAD, October 17.—The new Austro-German offensive near the Roumanian frontier south of Dorna Vatro has been checked, it was officially announced to-day. The Russians repulsed several enemy attacks. In Dobrudja fighting has broken out along the whole front. North of Korytnica and near Bolshovce obstinate fighting is going on. Fierce enemy counter attacks were repulsed yesterday, and throughout the day there was no interruption in the intense bombardment. The Russians captured a machine gun and fifty prisoners in this region.

THE KING'S PRAISE FOR THE RED CROSS

TORONTO, Ont., October 16.—The following cablegram from His Majesty King George has just been received by the Provincial British Red Cross Committee. Its commendation of the Red Cross work and the practical example set make a powerful appeal for October nineteenth:

"The work of mercy jointly carried out by the British Red Cross Society and the Order of St. John of Jerusalem, has evoked among my people the deepest feeling of gratitude and pride, from what I have seen at home and at the front I fully appreciate the splendid work the Society has accomplished. As it is only by a united Empire that victory will be secured, so for the relief of those who suffer in its attainment must we stand equally united. I have great pleasure in giving five thousand pounds as a donation to the fund upon the resources of which there must be ever increasing demand.

"(Signed) GEORGE R. I."

Her Majesty Queen Mary and His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, have also commended the work and contributed one thousand pounds each to the Empire-wide "Our Day" collection.

REMAINED AT HIS MACHINE GUN AFTER HE WAS WOUNDED

Lance-Corp. Arthur Peters Was in the Midst of the Hot Fighting on Somme When 21st Battalion Captured the Sugar Refinery

HIS BROTHER WRITES

Writing to his father, Mr. Charles Peters, 185 Bethune street, Pte. Geo. Peters of the 21st Battalion gives some interesting details of the manner in which his brother, Lance Corp. Arthur Peters of the same Battalion was wounded recently.

October 3, 1916.

Dear Father,—Just a few lines to let you know I am still in the land of the living and in the best of health. You wouldn't hardly know me now, every person tells me I am getting fat and tall. I weigh 175 pounds. But Arthur has got me beat for weight and height also. I hope you are all well at home. What is Evelyn's address I heard she is married. I suppose Frank will soon be over and also Harry. Well dad I had ten days leave to London and spent four days with Cousin Annie and I certainly had a time of my life and the ten days I was up there the Zeppelins gave us hell. I saw the three large Zepps come down, it was a sight of my life to see them. I may be soon going back to France or hell hole. Well I am not afraid to do ten months more, if I do fall. Remember I have brought two Huns down and probably more for all I know. I have met about 200 of our old 57th boys of the 30th Battalion. I met Sergeant Edwards and Major Carruthers and had a talk with them. I got after the major for a new pair of pants because my old ones were covered with blood and he didn't think twice to give them to me. I also met Jack Story just a few minutes ago.

Well I must tell you what happened to Arthur. He has been through some hot corners at St. Eloi, Messines, Ypres and the Somme where all the hard fighting is going on. They made a big charge on the 16th of September. Art got over past their third line and our Battalion took the Sugar Factory which had to be taken at all costs, and while they were holding it they were under heavy shell fire, then all but two of Arthur's machine gun crew were killed. Arthur stuck to his gun while he was wounded in the back with a bullet and he crawled into a shell hole and a Hun came up to him with his hands up and Art let him have his rifle, he also got some with machine gun.

Well dad you can figure on seeing Arthur back home some day next Spring because he has been wounded seriously through the back and head and he can hardly lift his arm. I am very pleased to know he is safe so don't worry he is O.K. You say you have a sentiment that one of us won't come back. Well it seems as if it is coming my way. I would sooner get killed myself than see Arthur go down. I always gave him money when ever he wanted it. We always got on well in the trenches, and out. I would always spend a few hours with him at night while he was watching his machine gun. We stuck together for nearly nine months in the same trenches, then we moved to St. Eloi, and we parted. This is where I got lifted in the air about eleven feet with a large shell and eight other men with me. We all got over to England later on. Arthur has gone through everything from start to finish. The Australians couldn't take the Sugar Factory so they called on our brigade and our boys took it and never left a German living.

Pte. John Gough, Canadian Infantry, 814 Water street.

Pte. Frank Marshal, Canadian Infantry, Douro.

Another gallant young Peterborough officer has made the supreme sacrifice for the Empire. This morning Mr. A. St. A. Smith, manager of the Bank of Toronto, Keene, received a telegram from Ottawa that his son, Lieut. Harold P. Smith, Canadian Field Artillery, is officially reported died of wounds. The news will be received with deep regret in Peterborough. Lieut. Smith was born in this city and spent most of his life here, living with his grandmother, the late Mrs. Denne, George street north. His genial qualities had endeared him to all with whom he came in contact. Lieut. Smith was educated in the local schools, at St. Alban's, Brockville, and at Royal Military College, Kingston. He and the late Lieut. Morris were close friends. They entered R. M.C. together, graduated together last year, received commissions in the same artillery brigade, left Peterborough together, and went to the front together. Now they have died within a couple of weeks of each other. Lieut. Smith went to the front with a western artillery brigade. Another brother, Lieut. Harry Smith, is at the front with the Canadian Engineers.

PTE. JOHN GOUGH.

Pte. John Gough who enlisted in Peterborough a year ago last August and went overseas as a member of the 59th Battalion, has been wounded in the recent fighting. He has not yet been officially reported but gives the information himself in a letter, in which he states that he was wounded in the right arm above the elbow on Sept 16th, and is now in hospital at Epsom Eng. Pte. Gough says that several other wounded Peterborough soldiers are in the same hospital. Pte. Gough boarded at the home of Mrs. Ward, 814 Water street.

PTE. FRANK MARSHAL.

Secret Storehouse Filled With Explosives Is Badly Shattered

EAST MACHIAS, Me., Oct. 17.—An explosion that shook this village, about 4 a.m. Saturday, sound was heavy enough to be heard for a distance of ten miles, revealed the fact that a building at the head of navigation on the East Machias river had been used secretly as a storehouse for some powerful explosive. Efforts to ascertain the ownership of the explosive were unsuccessful to-day. Reports that boats had been heard passing up the river during the heavy storm of Friday night and Saturday morning could not be confirmed.

The demolished building was owned by Carrell Dennison, of this village, and was used as a fish stand for a short time each year. The owner said he had visited the place for several months and that he had no knowledge that anything was stored there.

OTTAWA, Oct. 17.—R. B. Bennett, M.P., newly-appointed Director of National Service, in succession to Sir Thomas Tait, is leaving for Calgary, but will return in a week to enter upon his new position.

Warships Get Busy

BAR HARBOR, Me., Oct. 17.—The hasty recall of a Liberty party from the destroyer McDougall and the ship's subsequent at full speed today, gave rise to a report that some important development had come up in connection with the warship's neutrality patrol. The McDougall left Eastport and with other ships of the destroyer flotilla continued to watch the Maine coast for some sign of a foreign submarine or a submarine base of supplies.

Early in the afternoon she put in here and gave shore leave to a party of her sailors. The men had not been ashore long when four blasts of the ship's whistle recalled them on the run to their boats. The last boat load had hardly reached the destroyer's side when she lifted her anchor and steamed out of the harbor under full power.

Fast Destroyers on Duty.

The wild coastline in this region with its innumerable coves, has long been one of the favorite regions plotted out by rumor for hidden wireless stations and secret submarine bases. Marine observers have pointed out that some of the largest and fastest ships of the destroyer flotilla of the Atlantic fleet have been detailed for neutrality duty off this part of the coast.

MR. AND MRS. LEE HAVE CLOSE CALL IN LINDSAY FIRE

OFFICE WAS GUTTED

Special to The Examiner:

LINDSAY, Oct. 17.—When fire gutted the office and plant of the Machine Telephone Automatic early this morning, three hundred telephones were put out of commission. The origin of the fire is unknown, but the damage is great. Owing to a strong gale that prevailed the firemen had great difficulty in confining the fire to the one building. Local Manager D. E. H. Lee, wife and child, had a narrow escape in getting out of their apartments overhead, owing to the electric light current being detached and the dense clouds of smoke. The city office of the Canadian Pacific Railway is in the same block.

NAMES AND ADDRESSES ARE WANTED AT ONCE

The Patriotic League of Ashburnham have their list of names practically completed for the Christmas boxes for Ashburnham soldiers, so if there are any relatives or friends who have neglected to send in an address, will they kindly do so at once so that there will be no danger of any of the boys being overlooked. The labour of collecting these addresses is great, and any help in that direction will be appreciated by the ladies in charge. The names may be left with any of the committee.

CANADIAN FISHERIES INCREASE IN VALUE

Examiner Special:

OTTAWA, Oct. 17.—The total value of Canadian fisheries during the last fiscal year, according to the annual reports of the Fisheries Department, was slightly less than thirty-six million dollars, an increase of four and a half millions as compared with the previous year. Salmon, with a production of upwards of eleven million dollars, continues to hold first place, the most valuable of Canadian fish.

Objection To Sunday Movies

Special to The Examiner.

TORONTO, Oct. 17.—Premier Hearst to-day promised serious consideration of arguments of a deputation which appeared before the Government to protest against the Government's issuance of special permits for the use of moving pictures on Sunday for philanthropic purposes. The deputation was a strong one, representative of Roman Catholic as well as all Protestant denominations in Ontario.

Immaterial.

"Scientists are now generally agreed that drunkenness is a disease, and that the man who drinks should be treated by a physician."

HAS NOTHING FOR PRESS

Brigadier General Hemming, of Kingston, officer commanding No. 3 Military District, is a visitor in the city to-day. Accompanied by his aide-de-camp, Capt. T. A. Kidd, formerly of the 2nd Battalion, who was wounded at Langemarck, General Hemming arrived on the 11.40 G.T.R. train this morning, and was met at the station by Lieut.-Col. Johnston of the 247th Battalion, who had luncheon with the staff officers at the Empress Hotel. Afterwards General Hemming visited to the Armouries where he was conferring with Col. Johnston when the Examiner called.

General Hemming declined to be interviewed, but informed the Examiner, through Capt. Hamilton that his visit was one of inspection.

Popular rumour connects General Hemming's visit with the report that the 235th Battalion, in command of Lieut.-Col. Scobell, is to spend the winter in Peterborough. It is known that many of the officers and men of the 235th do not relish the prospect of a winter in Bowmanville, and would prefer Peterborough as a larger centre. However, the rumours have not passed the rumour stage yet, and the Examiner had no opportunity of asking General Hemming about the matter.

FIRST VISIT TO PETERBORO' IN FORTY-FOUR YEARS

Mr. and Mrs. John McGarrell, of Cardinal, Ontario, are visiting at the home of their son, Mr. T. H. McGarrell, 236 Frederick avenue. It is forty years since Mr. McGarrell last made a visit to Peterborough. At that time Mr. McGarrell was running in from Port Hope to Peterborough on the old Midland railway. His home was in Lindsay.

When Mr. McGarrell stepped off the train this morning he failed to recognize the Peterborough of forty-four years ago. That portion of the city from the present site of the Grand Trunk station to the river was one continuous string of lumber yards. Lumbering was a big industry in Peterborough at that time Mr. McGarrell contrasted the growth of this city with the decline of Port Hope. Whereas Peterborough has advanced by leaps and bounds in that period, Port Hope has remained stationary, or if anything has suffered from the ravages of time. This despite the fact that three railways run through the Lake shore town, and a fine natural harbour is at its service. Mr. McGarrell predicts a great future for Peterborough.

93rd Battalion Was Broken Up on Oct. 3rd

Sergeant Geo E. Cookman, formerly of the local police force, in a recent letter to Constable Blade, referred to the breaking up of the 93rd Battalion. Writing on Oct. 5th, he says: "All our boys are in France now, and I guess I won't be long. We move from this camp tomorrow for our winter quarters, and that is the last of the 93rd, for we will be attached to some other unit. So this is the last day of the 93rd."

Sergt. Cookman mentions the fact that the Battalion did not get leave before making their last move over to France, although other Battalions before and after them had that privilege.

...peal of the churches. In this regard the newspaper may modestly claim to be a natural and effective co-worker with the church. The union or separation of the Methodist and Presbyterian churches is, in the journalistic sense the business of the newspapers, for it will affect one way or the other the whole community. In discussing the union question, the newspapers, whichever side they take, will present facts and opinions that will appeal to the large proportion of the population directly concerned, and stir to thought and consideration of the subject in a large way that is not possible from the deliberations of synods, conferences and committees. The intelligent knowledge of the merits or faults of the union proposals, the people of both denominations and the public, owe, very largely, to the newspapers.

PATRIOTISM AND PATRONAGE.

Platitudes from the pulpit or the political platform may be innocuous, but they lack "punch" and pertinence to a degree that almost constitutes impertinence. Hon. J. C. Doherty, Minister of Justice, speaking at the organization of a Conservative association in Quebec, perpetrated the platitude that the true idea behind such an association should be that of a body of men working in the interests of the country without giving thought to differences of race or creed or anything else that might cause a division. To show that association with the blind goddess, must have affected the eyes of the Minister of Justice, his next sentence needs only to be cited:

"The administration (the government) had continued to occupy itself with the business of the country in the great struggle that is going on, without giving thought to the party."

It is difficult to understand a Minister of the Borden government saying that, and it is mighty hard to believe it. We all know that the patronage system—"giving thought to the party first and the country afterward"—has mightily interfered with the effect of the government's administration of affairs "in the great struggle that is going on." There is a pretty general belief that "giving thought to the party" has been the most active mental activity of the government. We have a very recent and striking example of how "thought of party" interests have impaired or threatened the impairment of a great national service. It seems to be fairly deducible that Sir Thomas Tait, who resigned as Director-General of National Service, almost before he had begun his work, was forced thereto by the workings of party influence. Sir Thomas Tait was selected for the position of Director-General of National Service—recruiting. It was announced that he was to be responsible to Sir Robert Borden alone so important was his position held. He was to work independently of the Militia Department, the Munitions Board, the Purchasing Commission, etc., etc. Yet before this man of large authority, and independence of function, could act, he was checked and interfered with by party influences. He selected and appointed a capable man as secretary, but somebody objected—somebody who didn't care a fig for national service, objected to seeing a party plum go out of the party. Mr. Murray, the secretary elected, was not a party politician; he had been secretary of the Manufacturers' Association. Sir Thomas Tait, seeing the hand of patronage evil interfering, felt that he could not work with his own hands tied, and he resigned. He had looked to Sir Robert Borden for backing in the work he had been appointed to do. He did not get that support. The premier, with his usual pliancy, heeded the call of patronage and lost the services of a man who could be counted upon, if given a free hand, to give some stimulus to recruiting—"without giving thought to the party." Mr. R. B. Bennett, a partisan, a party politician, has been appointed, and the government seems to have shown that it is moved by patronage first with patriotism to take its chance; that the new National Service, announced as non-partisan and patriotic, is to be subjected to political government control. The government asks Liberals to break away from party ties and accept places on the National Service committee. The prostituting of the committee to party control and patronage ends does not make the invitation more inviting. The government had the chance and showed the inclination to practice patriotism, but it seems patronage turns the balance.

IN THE PERIOD OF WAR PROSPERITY PREPARE FOR PEACE PROSPERITY

At the end of September, which marks half of the current fiscal year, Canadian trade totalled $791,000,000, compared with $589,000,000 for the same period a year ago. Bank deposits at the end of August aggregated $1,350,000,000, an increase of more than $250,000,000 during the year. The national revenue at the close of the fiscal year, to end in March next, will probably exceed $300,000,000. The government by then may have $50,000,000 to pay against the principal outlay on war account, after having settled its interest charges.

These figures reflect the prosperity of war. Business on this side of the Atlantic has flourished on the supply of the belligerents' needs overseas. Therein two important considerations arise. First, because of our geographical position, we have not suffered the hardships or made the sacrifices which Great Britain is doing. Second, the material improvement in our national position as a result of the war, may easily be shattered after the war unless thrift, foresight and forestation are practised.

While the finance department was handing the press a statement as to the greatly improved national position, Sir Hamar Greenwood, member of the British House of Commons (and an Ontario boy), was telling Toronto's Canadian Club some striking facts. We do not realize in Canada the mighty and major part which Great Britain is playing in the war. There are more motor cars being used in Toronto to-day than in all Great Britain, whose citizens have sent their cars in tens of thousands to the front for war service. We go on in Canada as if war were not our first consideration. Great Britain has instituted a tax of 60 per cent. on war profits; it is being paid cheerfully—a double fact unexampled in the history of taxation. These were a few of the statements of Sir Hamar Greenwood. They should point to great sacrifices, to larger assistance in the conduct of the war, to more economy and forethought so that a substitute for war orders may be obtained when peace comes.—Monetary Times.

CHANCE FOR SMALL INVESTOR TO HELP HIMSELF AND COUNTRY

The government soon will offer the public bonds of denominations of $10 and upwards. These will be purchasable through the banks and will yield the investor approximately 5 per cent. and will be redeemable in five years. They are designed to attract the surplus funds of several hundred thousand people who have comparatively small amounts to invest, who will also be given an opportunity to buy Dominion treasury debenture stock. These investments are safe; they will always have a market, and investors will have the satisfaction of knowing that their savings are helping to win the war.

The issue of the bonds which is now being planned by the finance department, is to be highly commended. In Great Britain, even the school children are placing their savings into war securities. A strong effort to induce Canadians to economize is needed. The American continent is extravagant. The hardships of periodical depressions have not yet taught the lesson of thrift in times of prosperity. A nation which conserves its small savings grows strong quickly.

While the government's plan to issue baby bonds is excellent, its application is a matter of considerable importance. If Canadians are not taught more about these securities than they have been about government annuities, for example, the sales of the bonds will be disappointing. Great Britain has advertised its war securities by means of posters, leaflets, through the banks, through the press, through the investment houses, in every available way. The advertising has been as attractive as the securities and the small investor in Britain has handed the government many millions of surplus savings. Baby bonds will not be bought here in quantities unless the masses know of them as they do the most popular breakfast foods.—Monetary Times.

MEASLES PREVALENT AT CAMP BORDEN

Men on Leave Bring Back the Disease With Them—81 Are Isolated

CAMP BORDEN, Oct. 17.—The outbreak of measles has reached its largest proportions since the camp opened, there being 81 cases now in isolation at the camp hospital. Lt.-Col. Warren, D.M.S., attributes the epidemic to men returning to camp on leave, and thus spreading the disease among his tent mates.

In this respect every precaution is taken. When a man is taken sick with the measles, every one who has come in contact with him is also put in quarantine for ten days, and if no signs result he is released. It is just a year ago in November when the outbreak in the Exhibition Camp occurred. The hospital has 92 in the main building, and 81 in isolation.

ALLIES RECOGNIZE VENIZELOS GOV'T

LONDON, Oct. 17.—The entente allies have formally recognized the provisional Government of Greece in the island of Crete, set up by former Premier Venizelos.

The entente consuls at Canea, the capital of Crete, have been instructed to act in union in this matter.

An official statement issued here to-day says it is only in Crete that the question of official recognition has yet arisen.

Official circles in London have received no word in regard to the recognition of the new Cabinet at Athens by the entente.

RESENT WAR STYLES IN PARIS FASHIONS

PARIS, Oct. 12.—New fashions for women have raised a discussion as to the propriety of the imitation of the "poilu's" uniform by either men or women.

Women's hats in the form of the Adrian helmet worn by the French soldiers in the trenches have made their appearance for the second time, while some dressmakers have gone so far as to ornament gowns with braid in the form, disposition and colors of the "fourragere" or aiguillettes that adorn the uniforms of regiments and battalions cited in orders.

Stuffs in the colors of the war cross ribbon—red and green—are also very largely used, and cloaks in khaki with a profusion of pockets, recalling the jacket of "Tommy Atkens" are being prepared to be launched for spring.

This attempt to give a more military tone to women's wear is attributed to the dressmaker and milliner more than to the wearer, and is severely condemned by part of the French press as a commercial dodge that does not harmonize with the general feeling. Khaki, horizon blue, the red and green braid of the "fourragere" and the Adrian helmet, they maintain, should be sacred to the fighting men.

The helmet, after failing once, is again meeting with poor success, and it is held that the war cross colors in skirts will not stand the contrast with the ever increasing black.

KETCHECUM CLUB HELP RED CROSS

The Peterborough branch of the Canadian Red Cross is benefitted to the extent of $13.60, the amount of a gift subscribed by the members of the Ketchecum Fishing Club while at camp. Mr. Thos. Hooper rigged up a cigar box and daily contributions were made with the above splendid results. Miss Morrow, treasurer of the fund, has been handed the amount today. It is possible that other clubs may duplicate the performance of the Ketchecum Club.

The Price of Victory Means Suffering!

Will you help to relieve the pain?

Victory in the great conflict is now in sight. As it draws nearer, however, so does its cost grow swiftly, and a heavy share in pain and suffering is laid upon the shoulders of our heroic defenders on the battlefield and on the sea.

"Give and Heal"

Whatever our burdens at home may be, they cannot equal the weight of anguish our sick and wounded must unavoidably undergo at the Front. There isn't a man, woman or child in Ontario but would wish to lift this weight, and there is one swift, splendid, efficient, economical way to do it, and that is to contribute on "Our Day," Thursday, October 19th, to the

BRITISH RED CROSS

WHY MONEY IS NEEDED.

Each new offensive means hundreds and thousands of new wounded, who are largely transported and cared for by the British Red Cross.

RED CROSS TRANSPORTATION.

The most of the work of transporting the British wounded in France has been taken over by the Red Cross. Over 2,000 motor ambulances and 600 other vehicles are in daily use. Not a man is ever kept waiting.

RED CROSS HOSPITAL TRAINS

Four, capable of carrying 500 men each, are running day and night—one of these in 13 months has carried over 26,000 patients and travelled 26,000 miles. Operating tables, kitchens, dispensaries and expert staffs, form part of the equipment.

SUPPLIES AND COMFORTS.

Depots have been established in France, Egypt, Malta and Saloniki, with ambulances, hospitals and rest stations. Everything a hospital or wounded man may need is stored and freely distributed at need. Our distant Allies are also helped.

RED CROSS HOSPITALS

Thirteen are maintained in France, with 3,214 beds, and more than twenty are supervised and staffed. In Egypt, ten are established, with 1,071 beds. In Great Britain nearly one thousand have been equipped and staffed, also numerous officers' and nurses' convalescent homes, etc.

FOR THE MAIMED AND BLIND.

The British Red Cross pays special attention to paralysed and maimed soldiers, to the blind and those who have suffered severe facial injuries, and marvellous work is being done in selected hospitals.

HOSPITAL MOTOR BOATS

A special Red Cross transport service of 30 motor ambulance boats for Mesopotamia has been supplied; also a shallow-draft, paraffin-driven, 150-cot Hospital Ship, with ice-making plant. Special services of this kind are always being undertaken.

SUNDRY CEASELESS ACTIVITIES.

Six offices in France, Egypt, Malta, etc., have sent out over 61,600 items of information regarding missing soldiers. Food for prisoners is provided—EVERY prisoner being looked after. Over two million books have been sent to Hospitals, etc., for convalescents. Rest stations are provided—one fed over 30,000, and dressed the wounds of over 1,500 others in a single week.

LOW COST OF MANAGEMENT.

Owing to immense voluntary aid, the administrative cost of the British Red Cross is cut to 2¼ per cent. Practically your whole gift will go to the direct relief of the sick, wounded and shattered on all the battle-fronts.

How and Where to Give

Will you not give those few cents or dollars you well can spare to so noble a work? The British Red Cross makes a direct appeal to generous and prosperous Ontario for help. Give through the Treasurer of your Local Committee, or the Clerk of your Municipality, or send it to Hon. T. W. McGarry, Treasurer British Red Cross Fund for Ontario, Parliament Buildings, Toronto.

Your gift is wanted on "OUR DAY"

EXPECT LOWER WHEAT YIELD

May Be Only 15.78 Bushels Per Acre as Against 29 Bushels Last Year—Oats 34.55 Bushels.

CANADA'S PRODUCTION

OTTAWA, Oct. 17.—The Census and Statistics office publishes the second or provisional annual estimate of the yield of the principal grain crops of Canada in 1916.

In general the reports of correspondents on September 30 confirm those of a month ago, but the average yields per acre are for most crops somewhat less. The reports also indicate that the areas estimated to be unproductive of grain area, if anything, larger than those already deducted, but pending further enquiries no change has been made in the harvested areas as reported last month.

The results now provisionally estimated are a total yield of wheat of 150,123,000 bushels from a harvested area of 10,005,300 acres, a yield per acre of 15.78 bushels as compared with 29 bushels last year and 15.67 bushels in 1914.

The total yield of oats is now placed at 338,469,000 bushels from 9,795,000 acres, a yield per acre of 34.55 bushels, as against 45.76 last year and 31.12 bushels in 1914.

The total yield of oats is now placed at 338,469,000 bushels from 9,795,000 acres, a yield per acre of 34.55 bushels, as against 45.76 last year and 31.12 bushels in 1914.

The total yield of barley is 32,280,000 bushels from 1,328,800 acres or 24.31 bushels per acre and of rye 2,858,500 bushels from 101,420 acres, or 20.30 bushels per acre.

SAID THE WAR WAS NEEDED

Lord Roberts Left Essay Calling Present Struggle a Tonic.

Bridgeport, Conn., Oct. 17.—An essay written by the late Field Marshal, Lord Roberts, the beloved "Bobs" of the British army, which was read by Cosmo Hamilton last week at a meeting of the Contemporary Club, shows that that keen fighter, whose prestige won thousands of Indian recuits to the colours, was satisfied that the great war was his nation's greatest need.

"History repeats itself," Lord Roberts wrote only a short time before his fatal visit to the front. "The present is the past entered through another gate, and war is as inevitable as death. It is not, and never was, an accident. In every instance from the beginning of time it is a well deserved punishment worked up to and earned. It will come again with the swing of the pendulum. It is salutary necessary, and is the only national tonic that can be prescribed."

Peace begets over-civilization, and over-civilization degeneracy, Lord Roberts argues. Then comes war, and if a country has any health left in its constitution it revives, gathers itself together, makes the most tremendous sacrifices, puts forth an effort of a strength of which no man thought it capable and rises like the phoenix."

New England Towns Invaded By Black Workers From South

Mr. Ernie Howson Noted New Movement to Relieve Labour Difficulties in the Manufacturing North

Mr. E. H. Howson, secretary-treasurer of the Peterborough Lock Manufacturing Company, who has just returned from a business trip in the New England States during the past two weeks, stated that he had observed in quite a few of the manufacturing centres the increased number of negroes attracted to the northern states for the rougher labour in the factories. They were engaged in shifting and trucking around the buildings and yards and were otherwise employed in the heavy work of the plants. Manufacturers were so handicapped by the scarcity of labour that employment agencies commenced recruiting among the southern cities offering inducements to the negroes far in advance of what the South afforded. The result has been an astonishing exodus to the manufacturing centres, particularly in the New England district.

The movement has grown out of the great munition work in the United States. White workmen are specially adapted for the fine and more skilled work, and the black for the rough, labouring jobs.

Mr. Howson remarked that all the manufacturing cities were extremely busy, and prices of raw materials, including steel and brass mill products, had advanced to excessively high prices.

WAR TAXES.

Last week's remittance of the Grand Theatre to the Provincial Government for war tax on tickets to the Grand amounted to almost $75.00. Peterborough's contribution to the war tax in this branch alone amounts to a very creditable sum weekly.

The St. Peter's Patriotic Club

St. Peter's Patriotic Club have arranged an "at home" for next Monday night, Oct. 23 in St. Alphonsus' Lyceum, the proceeds to be used in sending comforts and Christmas remembrances to the boys at the front. The public is reminded that the club's work room for the Red Cross at St. Alphonsus' Lyceum is open every Thursday from 2 p.m. to 9 p.m. and all are urged to assist in the much-needed work. The young people are asked to come in the evening and give their assistance.

COL. J. D. CLARKE'S BROTHER MISSING

Dean Clarke, superintendent of Toronto General Hospital, is in receipt of a despatch from Ottawa informing him that his half-brother, Sergt. Richard H Clarke, is officially reported as missing from his unit, the 58th Battalion. Sergt. Clarke is also a brother of Col. Jas. D. Clarke, who was an officer of the 57th Regiment, and while in Peterborough was employed in the Examiner Office. He enlisted in Fort William at the outbreak of the war, and has participated in many engagements. He has been buried twice by shell fire, and has been wounded three times. Prior to his enlistment he was a lumber contractor in Northern Ontario.

A.Y.P.A. Of All Saints' Hold Enjoyable Meeting

The first regular meeting of All Saint's A.Y.P.A. was held last night with Mr. J. W. Worth in the chair. In spite of the bad weather a fine crowd was in attendance including the Anglican pupils of the Normal School who were the guests of the A.Y.P.A. for the evening. The following programme was rendered and was appreciated by all.

Instrumental Duet—Miss O. Johnston and Miss Buckham.
Reading—Mr. Jamieson.
Selections on the Edison Diamond Disc.
Humurous Vocal Solo—Mrs. Rathbone.

Musical Contest.
Reading—Rev. R. B. Grobb.
Selection on Edison Diamond Disc.

A new Edison Diamond Disc phonograph was very kindly loaned for the occasion by Mr. J. M. Greene and proved a source of much enjoyment, judging by the encores that were demanded.

At a short business meeting the following officers were elected.

Hon. Pres.—Rev. R. B. Grobb.
President—Mr. F. Dawson.
1st Vice—Mr. A. Catchpole.
2nd Vice—Miss M. Herbert.
Secretary—Miss R. Williams.
Treasurer—Miss A. E. Paraglove.
Councilors—Miss M. Flowers, Miss F. Roots, Mr. Heafield.

After refreshments had been served a vote of thanks was tendered the retiring officers by Rev. R. B. Grobb for their untiring work during the season.

A most enjoyable evening was brought to a close with the singing of the National Anthem.

Business Men's Gym. Class Has Opened at Y.M.C.A.

The Junior Employed Boys' Bible Club held an enjoyable social in the boys' parlor last night. The boys met for gymnasium work from 7 to 8 p. m. A good swim from 8 to 8.30, and then they retired to the parlors where a fine, bright fire was burning in the grate. Corn was popped and apples served; patriotic songs were sung and a short religious service brought a most enjoyable evening to a close.

The Senior Employed Boys' Gymnasium Class had a large turn out last night. Up to date this is the largest attended class. There is still room for many more boys in this fine class. All employed boys between the ages of 16 and 18 will find a hearty welcome.

The Senior Employed Boys' Bible Club will meet for organization on Thursday evening at 7.30.

The Collegiate Bible Club will meet for organization on Friday evening at 7.30. Every older boy who attends High School, whether he is a member of the Y.M.C.A. or not, will be made welcome to this class.

The Business Men's "Gym." class held their first session last night. There was an attendance of ten out for the opening session, which shows that the business men of the city appreciate the need of such a class for the building up of the body and having healthy recreation together. This class is open to all business men of the city, and a large turnout is looked for Thursday night.

At the men's meeting Sunday afternoon, the Rev. Mr. Peever gave a very helpful and interesting address to the young men and older boys of the city. Mr. Peever spoke to the men on "Playing the Game," and his advice to young men will have an everlasting effect in the conduct of their lives in the future.

Next Sunday Mr. Hone of the Collegiate Institute staff, will be the speaker. Every man and older boy will receive a hearty welcome to the Sunday meeting.

East City Couple Celebrate Their Fiftieth Anniversary

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Cox, 496 Rogers Street Were Presented With a Purse of Gold Accompanied By An Address—Twelve Grandchildren Were Present at the Festivities.

Last evening Mr. and Mrs. Henry Cox, 496 Roger Street, were the recipients of a pleasant surprise which took the form of a presentation and an address. The occasion was the fiftieth anniversary of their wedding. Fifty years ago yesterday the happy couple joined hands in a life partnership. At that time they resided near Colborne. About twenty-eight years ago Mr. and Mrs. Cox removed to Peterborough, where they have since resided. Both Mr. and Mrs. Cox were born near Colborne. Mr. Cox is seventy-eight years of age and Mrs. Cox is seventy-two. The union was blessed with nine children, seven of whom survive, namely, John Cox, who resides on George street, south; Adam Cox of Otonabee; Robert Cox of South Township; Fred Cox of Otonabee; William Cox of Vancouver; Clifford Cox, at home; and Mrs. A. C. Weir, 14 St. James Avenue, Toronto. All the children, with the exception of William, were present at the festivities last evening. Twelve grandchildren were also present, in addition to a large number of local friends.

The Address.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Cox were presented with a purse of gold and the following address, which was signed by each member of the family:

Peterborough, Ontario,
October 16, 1916.

Dear Father and Mother,—On this the Golden Anniversary of your wedding day, we, your children, wish to convey to you both our fondest love and deepest respect for all that you have done for us, not only during the time of our dependence upon you, but also for the help and counsel always so willingly extended to each and all of us since we left the old home to make new homes for ourselves.

We feel that we cannot allow this anniversary to pass without telling you how sincerely we appreciate the patient, self-denial you both have practiced for our benefit during the past fifty years.

The blameless lives you have lived in order that your name might come to us without stain or blemish, are and always will be remembered by us, your honest, Christian dealings with your own family and with your neighbours in the community have had, and always will have, a powerful influence in shaping our own lives.

We trust and pray that you may both be long spared to us and would ask you to accept from us with our best love and deepest respect, this small memento of your Golden Wedding Anniversary.

In conclusion, we wish for you all the happiness it has been your pleasure to bestow on us in the past, for we feel that no children ever had more cause to honour father and mother than we have. (Signed)

W. Cox,
W. J. Cox,
Adam Cox,
Robert Cox,
Fred Cox,
Clifford Cox,
Emma Cox Weir.
William Cox,

Mrs. Cox was also the recipient of a beautiful brooch, the gift of her daughter, Mrs. A. C. Weir of Toronto.

Last night's affair was a genuine surprise for both Mr. and Mrs. Cox. Early in the day they were whisked to the home of their son, Mr. John Cox, George street, South, were they were induced to remain until evening on the assumption that they were to attend a fowl supper somewhere in the country. Needless to say they were agreeably surprised to learn of the preparations that began to take form in the evening. Both Mr. and Mrs. Cox were the recipients of congratulations from a wide circle of friends.

At the conclusion of the anniversary dinner two little grandchildren were christened by the Rev. Mr. Whattam of Mark street church.

Philadelphia despatches say the impression is strong there that Norfolk and Western will declare an extra dividend this month.

For the first time in history the average price of the eight leading steel products has passed the 63 mark. The present average is $63.42 per ton, a gain of 76 cents over last week.

First shipment of 10,000 barrels of Nova Scotia apples has reached London and been sold at record prices.

President Underwood of Erie R. R. favours the re-election of Wilson, believing the President used his best judgment in the eight-hour negotiations.

The motion to advance the government's case against U. S. Steel Corporation was granted by the Supreme Court and Feb. 26 set as date for hearing.

Good buying is reported in U. S. Steel below the 110 level. Stale down orders are found in the hands of specialists from current prices downward. They come from important sources as well as the public. Stop loss orders are noted toward par, but they are not as thickly placed as from 115 to 120.

Scale down buying of Lackawanna Steel is reported from well informed sources. There are indications of quiet accumulation for bankers connected with the controlling interests. No attempt is made to bid up Lackawanna but the floating supply is said to be very small. It is estimated to be earning $34 a share now.

There appears to be a growing feeling among the rank and file around the street that there is still a large amount of Kennecott Copper afloat, and that until it is absorbed the stock may not be in a position to enjoy a substantial advance. Information channels continue to suggest good buying of Kennecott on all current reactions.

Gossip in commission houses suggests that some of the equipment stocks of themselves worthy of present and higher prices are still over bought by outsiders, who are being forced to liquidate by demands for larger margins. This applies particularly to the railway equipment list whose future is exceptionally bright marketwise.

More Vindication of Chaplain Davidson

Unsolicited Letter Tells of His Good Work With the 93rd Battalion —Church Paper's Protest.

Rev. Canon Cornish, St. John's, has received the following letter, which will be read with interest by the many Peterborough friends of Rev. Canon Davidson:

Dear Canon Cornish,—The Bishop told me that you were somewhere east, but I had no idea I was to meet the man whose place you are filling and the Regiment from that town. Canon Davidson is quite splendid and did lots of first-class work with the Battalion. I found it one of the best regiments, spiritually. The last draught left for France to-day. There are a few left as details for working purposes. You can tell all the Church folk who have boys in the Regiment that Major Davidson did all he possibly could for them, and I think they responded very well. Still many of them could and will do better.

This is great life and opportunity. With best wishes.

Yours ever,

Edward W. Hughes.

A Cowardly Act.

One of the most cowardly acts that any man can be guilty of is to hit another behind his back. And when the attack is made on a man who has left his home to serve his country at the front it becomes all the more cowardly. No one who knows the Rev. Canon Davidson, rector of St. John's Church, Peterborough Ont., and chaplain of the 93rd Battalion, needs to be told anything regarding his honesty of purpose and his whole-hearted desire to accompany his battalion to the firing line. When he reached England, however, he found, as large numbers of other Canadian chaplains have found, that battalion chaplains either become brigade chaplains or are transferred to some other work, and the latter is what happened in Major Davidson's case. The editor of the Peterborough Daily Review, however, in the issue of September 20th, has stated that a Salvation Army adjutant in that city had been asked to become chaplain of the above battalion, and adds that "when the battalion reached England the Major (i.e., Canon Davidson) had other plans in view which he immediately carried into effect." The latter had, it states, "secured the appointment of chaplain of a training hospital in England" and that his only connection with the battalion was that his name was on the pay roll. The ignorance of the facts of the situation displayed by the writer (said to be a battalion officer), and the imputation of dishonest motives to a man of unblemished character, merit the contempt of every right-thinking person, and we trust that the good people of Peterborough will see that he gets the punishment he deserves.—Canadian Churchman.

ENJOYABLE SOCIAL IN HONOUR OF REV. MR. KEITH LAST NIGHT

In spite of the unfavorable weather of last night a large number gathered in the Lecture Room of Knox Church to enjoy a social given in honour of Rev. H. J. Keith the former pastor. Besides Knox people there were a number of Mr. Keith's friends present from other congregations to contribute to the goodwill of the occasion.

A short programme was rendered. Vocal solos by Messrs. Humpage, Smith and Anderson were much enjoyed. Muriel Podger, though still quite a little girl demonstrated the fact that she is an excellent reciter. Messages of welcome from the Session Board, Sunday School, and Young People's Guild were given by Messrs. Byers, McCannon, Clark, and Hillier respectively. Rev. R. Pogue and Sheriff Hall expressed their personal good will and the good will of St. Paul's Church. While Rev. J. R. Webb further strengthened his position as a most welcome figure at Knox gatherings, by a bright speech.

Rev. Mr. Keith in his address gave some impressions of his work in the West. He also referred to the old bonds between Knox and himself, when the relation was that of pastor and people as being very dear to him still, and assured the gathering that the fortunes of his old charge are closely followed by him and his family with sympathetic interest.

At the close of his speech Mr. MacKenzie asked him to carry back to Mrs. Keith a message of the heartiest good will and affection from Knox. Mr. Keith accepted this commission amidst the enthusiastic applause of the audience.

Refreshments were served and the function brought to a close by the singing of a verse of "Blest be the tie that binds", followed by brief prayer led by Mr. Morrison.

The thanks of the congregation are due to the Ladies' Aid who had charge of the arrangements, and to those who so kindly assisted in the programme.

Mr. Keith left this morning for Toronto where he will attend the sessions for the Foreign Mission Board of the Presbyterian church.

Another Auto Breaks G. T. R. Charlotte St. Gate Off Hinges

Mr. Louis Florence Driving Through Last Night's Rain Picked Off Gate That Was Repaired Only Three Weeks Ago.

The G.T.R. gates on Charlotte street were put out of commission again last night shortly after six o'clock when Mr. Louis Florence of the Home Furnishing Co., smashed into the south gate on the west side of the track. He was driving east in the heavy downpour of rain which, forming a mist on his windshield, obscured his vision. The descending gate loomed directly in front of him before he noticed it, and it was then too late to prevent a collision. Only three weeks ago this gate was wrenched from its position by an automobile. Commenting upon the frequency of these accidents Mr A. MacNab, G.T.R. station agent, remarked that if every "casualty" the gates had sustained represented a life saved or serious accident averted, they had proved their protective value.

Memorial Tablet To Late Private Hope Unveiled By Mr. Gillespie

At a memorial service in the Villiers Sunday school on Sunday night Mr. G. A. Gillespie unveiled a tablet erected to the memory of Private William Hope of Otonabee, who was killed in action in France. The memorial tablet was contributed by the residents of the school section in which the late Wm. Hope attended school as a boy. These comrades of other days were present in large numbers at the service. Mr. Gillespie himself spent his school days with the late William Hope and had intimately known him in all the later years. The Hope family is old and prominent in the township of Otonabee, and to its honorable past is added the glory that was purchased by the sacrifices of this son who died in the prime of his manhood. Mr. Gillespie referred to the deceased in sympathetic terms, that the occasion and the parting of old ties naturally called up. Rev. Mr. McKechnern of Keene, conducted the service.

Fat Salary For Haughton

BOSTON, Mass., Oct. 17. — Percy Haughton, who during the summer had been devoting his attention to the Boston National League baseball team, has signed a contract to coach Harvard's football team again this year. His salary, it is said, will be $15,000. Under the terms of his new contract, it is said, Mr. Haughton will receive $7,500 fro mthe Harvard Athletic Association and an equal sum from the graduate body. He denies that he delayed signing a new contract with Harvard for financial reasons.

During his connection with the Braves team Mr. Haughton did not appear on the coaching lines at Harvard. His substitute was Leo Leary, who was given the title of field coach. Leary will still coach, but Haughton will take supreme command over this year's Harvard team.

COLD SPELL ON THE WAY

Rain and colder weather is the latest promise of the weatherman for the next few days. Weather conditions have been much disturbed generally throughout the Dominion, with the result a storm of considerable energy has broken and is moving across Lake Superior. The good old notice storm winds will be responsible for the colder spell which is coming. While conditions have been favourable this month, records show the weather to be a little colder than during the same period last year. The minimum temperature during October, 1915, was 40 and the maximum 70, while the register shows the minimum to be 36 and the maximum 68 degrees up to date for this month.

Music & Drama

GUY BROTHERS.

The popularity of the old favourites, Guy Brothers, is evidenced by the fact that a crowded house greeted their appearance at the Grand last night in spite of the downpour of rain. The company generally manages to afford its audiences an enjoyable evening and last night was no exception to the rule. The first part was not as good as usual, the chorus singing being especially weak, but the excellence of the olio more than counterbalanced this deficiency. The work of the Morale Brothers on the Roman rings was sensational, as was the act by Kinks, the contortionist. Audrey Tobin, the funny fellow on the rolling stone, scored a big hit.

NORTH MONAGHAN MEETING OCTOBER 19

A public meeting of North Monaghan ratepayers will be held in May's School House on Thursday, Oct. 19th, at 8 p.m. to deal with the British Red Cross appeal. It is hoped that this meeting will be largely attended. The subject should appeal to every Canadian and whatever action is taken by Monaghan should be the fruit of a representative gathering.

Scarcity of Working Girls Loses Ottawa Two Big Firms

OTTAWA, Oct. 17.—What has become of the working girl in Ottawa? Factories are moving to other cities for lack of labour, and housewives are distressed. A good housemaid is guarded more zealously than family silver, and every Sunday columns are filled with matrimonial offers. The small towns round about in search of the disappearing species, the domestic servant, advertisements run weeks at a time in all the newspapers, French and English, without a single application for either domestic or factory help. The manufacturers have given it up and are moving to the cities, in Quebec where the problem for large families is less acute, as the problem for the housewife who can transport herself and her household goods to the city is not so great.

The Dominion Rubber Co., 400 Eccles street, struggled along for two years with a shortage of factories in the small towns, endeavoring to secure enough labour in Ottawa to bring the work under one roof, without success. While it would employ 700 or 800 girls, it has never been able to secure more than 40.

ARE LEAVING CITY.

According to Mr. Filion, the manager, they are now taking their works to Victoriaville, Que., where the town council has offered them special inducements, and girls are procurable.

"There is too much competition in Ottawa," Mr. Filion simply could not make it work, and we expect in Victoriaville, where there are no other factories, to have a little peace. In fact we hope to take our whole business down there.

The Loughborough Mining Co., Ltd., another firm which is moving to Sorel, Quebec, gives a reason for its change. In a new location they have built a similar $50,000 building to take care of their business.

ONE OF THE REASONS.

The women of Ottawa say that their maids are marrying the soldiers and living on separation allowances or going into factories at higher wages. The munition factories pay $7 and $8 a week and many times the women are able to make more when paid by the piece.

The local companies pay from $4 to $6.50 and $7.2, but are not able to secure sufficient labour to turn out their work.

Women who have paid the best wages for domestic service, and allowed their maids privileges unheard of in other days, have been unable to keep them, and in spite of the fact that reduced incomes due to the war have caused some to give up their maids, it seems to be impossible to secure help.

CLAIMED WHISKEY FOR VAPOR BATHS

OTTAWA, Oct. 17.—The minimum penalty of a fine of $200 and costs with the alternative of serving three months in jail was imposed on James Allen, by Magistrate Ashwith yesterday when he was found guilty of unlawfully keeping liquor for sale in a public place at 403 Wellington street which was formerly known as the New Almonte Hotel.

In pleading not guilty through his lawyer, W. Palmer, the defendant maintained that the hotel was not a public place as all boarders left before September 16, when the province went dry. The bar, he declared, was now being used as a domestic kitchen and another part of the building was being used as a real estate office.

When Inspector McLaughlin visited the place on October 5, he found Allen and a few other persons in a little room off from the bar. Allen told the inspector then that that was his real estate office.

The plea entered by Allen that he was using a portion of the hotel as a real estate office was one of the points on which Magistrate Ashwith based his decision of finding the accused guilty, because, if Allen was using it as a real estate office, then the building would come under the term of a public place.

Allen claimed that the two gallons of whisky which was found in a three gallon jar was being kept by him for use in taking vapor baths.

There is still another charge of keeping liquor for sale on October 11, and a charge of selling liquor on October 9 against Allen.

At a sale of dairy Shorthorns in England an average of £30 per head was realized. Ordinary English milkers are bringing £20 to £35, or double the price of two years ago.

GIRL FOUND IN FARMER'S BARN TELLS STORY OF ILL TREATMENT

The Authorities in Peterboro' Have Been Advised of the Case—Girl Was Scantily Clad and in a Filthy Condition—Spent the Night in a Barn

LINDSAY, Oct. 17.—Early yesterday morning as Mr. Daniel Murphy of South Ops, near Riverside cemetery, went out to the stables, he was surprised to find a young girl in the barn. She was unable to give Mr. Murphy any information about herself, and was suffering greatly from exposure. She was taken into the house and tenderly cared for by Mrs. Murphy. High County Constable Conquerhood was telephoned for, and on his arrival took charge of the unfortunate girl. She was very poorly dressed and had her body was barely covered with apparel, while her boots were unbuttoned.

The girl, who is nineteen years of age, was brought to town and handed over to Mrs. Sharpe, agent of the Children's Aid Society. To Constable Conquerhood was telephoned for, and The Margaret Cox Home of Peterborough, stated that she was employed by parties near Reaboro, who had told her that they were going to send her to prison for stealing apples. They frightened her so badly that she ran away from them, and in her wanderings reached Mr. Murphy's farm in an exhausted condition and unable to proceed any farther. She spent the night inside the barn. To the Constable she also told a story of ill treatment and abuse and was anxious to get to the Margaret Cox Home at Peterborough. Judging from her appearance she has undoubtedly been neglected. Her clothes and body were in a filthy condition, and had not been provided with suitable clothing. She reluctantly accepted a coat which Mrs. Murphy kindly gave her, and absolutely refused a gift of money.

The authorities at Peterborough will be notified of the case.

Band gives some interesting news in regard to the visit of the 210 Canadian musicians to London where they gave a big concert at the Royal Albert Hall. He wrote as follows:—

We left Shorncliffe last Sunday, at 6 a.m. by special train and arrived in London at 9 a.m. We broke up into three bands for the march through London from Charing Cross Station, through the Strand, Piccadilly and Leceister Square, arriving at the Royal Albert Hall about 11 o'clock. We then took up our positions inside this, not only massive, but beautiful hall and under Lt. Thomas Beachman we went through our programme which was as follows.

Overture "Patrie"—Bizet.

Set of Dances "Came Noisette"—D. Tschaikowski.

Selection "The Shamrock"—Myddleton.

Humorous Descriptive "Three Blind Mice"—A. Lotte.

"Three Dances, Henry VII.—E. Geiman.

Overture "William Tell"—Rossini.

O Canada.

God Save the King.

The massed band also played at Folkestone on Sunday. October 1st. It was a fine day and thousands of people were out. Bandmaster Steigen is the bandmaster of the massed bands. He brought the 90th band from Winnipeg.

Bandmaster Dallin adds:

We are sending our 4th draft tomorrow at 5 p.m. We just got the beautiful order "4 a.m.—Heveille" The rest of the Battalion will likely move some day this week. We do not know where we are going. Some say over to Shoreliffe and another rumour is Brighton. I hope it is Brighton. Wherever we go I expect it will be into huts—anyway I hope so. Sleeping in tents with no floors in them is not very nice, especially now the foggy weather is started.

Pte. Arthur Gibb of Havelock, is the latest recruit to join the 247th Battalion. It is a sad commentary after Peterborough's splendid recruiting record that most of the recruits coming forward for the new battalion are from the surrounding district and not from the city itself.

Crown Attorney G. W. Hatton has received a cablegram from his son Edwin in London, to the effect that Lieut. Norman Hatton's injuries are not serious. The young field officer was wounded in the face. His many friends will be glad to hear that he has not been badly injured.

Mrs. J. R. Stratton has received word that her nephew, Pte. Stratton Gooding of Kenora, has been admitted to hospital at Rouen, France. He was reported wounded several days ago.

KINGSTON SCHOONER WRECKED

Special to The Examiner.

OSWEGO, N. Y., Oct. 17. — The schooner Lizzie Metzner went ashore off Oswego early this morning in a sixty mile gale. Tremendous seas were running in the lake and the crew, consisting of Capt. Chasance V. Derraw, Samuel William and J. R. Lobb, all of Kingston, Ont., were rescued by the coast guard by means of a breeches buoy. Several yachts in Oswego harbour were driven on the rocks by the gale. Fears are expressed for by the gale. Fears are expressed for the Great Lakes.

Medical Course To Be Extended

One more year will be added to the course of study for undergraduates at the Faculty of Medicine after July, 1918, the course extending for six years instead of five. This was decided on at the regular meeting of the University Senate on Friday night. By doing this Toronto University is adopting a course of study already taken up or being taken up by all first-class medical colleges in the United States and Great Britain. Dr. C. K. Clarke, dean of the Faculty of Medicine, hopes that the change will give the students a broader and more comprehensive knowledge of the whole subject of medicine. Whether the standard of entrance will be raised or not has not yet been decided, but the first year will be really what is known as a premedical year. It has been stated in some quarters that graduation should be the standard of entrance to medicine as is the case at Johns Hopkins University. PETERBOROUGH COLLEGIATE LOSE AT LINDSAY

The Lindsay Warder says: In a game that was featured by good all-around playing, the Lindsay Collegiate rugby team defeated the Peterborough Collegiate rugbyists on Saturday by the score of 21-6.

Beautiful rugby weather was in evidence with a bright sun and very little wind, and a good-sized crowd turned out to see the first game in the newly-organized league for the G. N. Gordon cup.

The referee, Mr Brown, of Peterborough, and the umpire, Mr. Jack Bigelow, of Lindsay, handled the game very creditably and were very impartial.

In the first quarter the play was even. Both teams were evenly balanced in size, speed and weight, but the Lindsay team were superior in their backs and tackling ability. Towards the latter end of the quarter the L.C.I. team by a series of plays and backs succeeded in carrying the ball into Peterborough territory and registered the first count by scoring a touchdown. This ended the scoring in this period. L.C.I. 6, P.C.I. 0.

The second quarter opens with Peterborough in possession of the ball at Lindsay's forty yard line. The play in this quarter was about even. Peterborough succeeded in kicking the ball over for a point, but this was followed closely by Lindsay doing the same thing. This ended the scoring. Half-time score: L.C.I. 6, P.C.I. 1.

In the third quarter Lindsay seemed to be getting stronger in their attack and by clever plays and kicks managed to secure another touchdown which was not converted. Peterborough then took a hand in the scoring by kicking the ball over the dead line. This ended the scoring for this period. L.C.I. 11, P.C.I. 2.

In the final quarter Lindsay had the better part of the play. By means of bucks they secured two more touchdowns, while Peterborough could not again score. Final score: L.C.I. 21, P.C.I. 2.

The return game will be played in Peterborough next Saturday and if Lindsay succeeds in eliminating Peterborough they will play the winners of Belleville-Napanee series.

Lindsay Collegiate may well be proud of her team. With only a few exceptions they are new men at the game and they constantly improved themselves with every succeeding game, as it is the first time in three years that the L.C.I. has defeated a P.C.I. rugby team.

For Peterborough Green and Moore Cannif were the whole works, while for Lindsay the whole team starred.

Following is the L.C.I. line-up: Halves — Swayne, Gregory, Career. Flying wing —J. Kirkconnell. Quarter—Mark. Scrimmage — Wilford, McClory, McDougall. Wings — McCrae, H. Kirkconnell. Middle — Johnston, Brandon. Outside — Glenney, Allely.

Referee, Mr. Brown umpire Mr. Bigelow. Attendance, 300.

The Authorities in Peterboro' Have Been Advised of the Case—Girl Was Scantily Clad and in a Filthy Condition—Spent the Night in a Barn

LINDSAY, Oct. 17.—Early yesterday morning as Mr. Daniel Murphy of South Ops, near Riverside cemetery, went out to the stables, he was surprised to find a young girl in the barn. She was unable to give Mr. Murphy any information about herself, and was suffering greatly from exposure. She was taken into the house and tenderly cared for by Mrs. Murphy. High County Constable Conquerhood was telephoned for, and on his arrival took charge of the unfortunate girl. She was very poorly dressed—in fact her body was barely covered with apparel, while her boots were unbuttoned.

The girl, who is nineteen years of age, was brought to town and handed over to Mrs. Sharpe, agent of the Children's Aid Society. To Constable Conquerwood was telephoned for, and The Margaret Cox Home of Peterborough, stated that she was employed by parties near Reaboro, who had told her that they were going to send her to prison for stealing apples. They frightened her so badly that she ran away from them, and in her wanderings reached Mr. Murphy's farm in an exhausted condition and unable to proceed any farther. She spent the night inside the barn. To the Constable she also told a story of all treatment and abuse as I was anxious to get to the Margaret Cox Home at Peterborough. Judging from her appearance she has undoubtedly been neglected. Her clothes and body were in a filthy condition, and had not been provided with suitable clothing. She reluctantly accepted a coat which Mrs. Murphy kindly gave her, and absolutely refused a gift of money.

The authorities at Peterborough will be notified of the case.

Band gives some interesting news in regard to the visit of the 210 Canadian musicians to London where they gave a big concert at the Royal Albert Hall. He wrote as follows:—

"We left Shorncliffe last Sunday, at 6 a.m. by special train and arrived in London at 9 a.m. We broke up into three bands for the march through London from Charing Cross Station, through the Strand, Piccadily and Leicester Square, arriving at the Royal Albert Hall about 11 o'clock. We then took up our positions inside this, not only massive, but beautiful hall and under Lt. Thomas Beachman we went through our programme which was as follows.

Overture "Patrie"—Bizet.

Set of Dances "Casse Noisette"—D. Tschaikowski.

Selection "The Shamrock"—Myddleton.

Humorous Descriptive "Three Blind Mice"—A. Lotte.

"Three Dances, Henry VII.—E. Geiman.

Overture "William Tell"—Rossini.

O Canada.

God Save the King.

The massed band also played at Folkestone on Sunday, October 1st. It was a fine day and thousands of people were out. Bandmaster Steiger is the bandmaster of the massed bands. He brought the 90th band from Winnipeg.

Bandmaster Dallin adds:

We are sending our 4th draft to morrow at 5 p.m. We just got the beautiful order: "4 a.m.—Heveille" The rest of the Battalion will likely move some day this week. We do not know where we are going. Some say over to Shorncliffe and another rumour is Brighton. I hope it is Brighton. Wherever we go I expect it will be into huts—anyway I hope so. Sleeping in tents with no floors in them is not very nice; especially now the foggy weather is started.

Pte. Arthur Gibb of Havelock, is the latest recruit to join the 207th Battalion. It is a sad commentary after Peterborough's splendid recruiting record that most of the recruits coming forward for the new battalion are from the surrounding district and not from the city itself.

Crown Attorney G. W. Hatton has received a cablegram from his son Edwin in London, to the effect that Lieut. Norman Hatton's injuries are not serious. The young 92nd officer was wounded in the face. His many friends will be glad to hear that he has not been badly injured.

Mrs. J. R. Stratton has received word that her nephew, Pte. Stratton Gooding of Kenora, has been admitted to hospital at Rouen, France. He was reported wounded several days ago.

KINGSTON SCHOONER WRECKED

Special to The Examiner.

OSWEGO, N. Y., Oct. 17. — The schooner Lizzie Metzner went ashore off Oswego early this morning in a sixty mile gale. Tremendous seas were running in the lake and the crew, consisting of Capt. Chauncey Y. Mayaw, Samuel William and J. R. Lobb, all of Kingston, Ont., were rescued by the coast guard by means of breeches buoy. Several yachts in Oswego harbour were driven on the rocks by the gale. Fears are expressed for by the gale. Fears are expressed for the Great Lakes.

Medical Course To Be Extended

One more year will be added to the course of study for undergraduates at the Faculty of Medicine after July, 1918, the course extending for six years instead of five. This was decided on at the regular meeting of the University Senate on Friday night. By doing this Toronto University is adopting a course of study already taken up or being taken up by all first-class medical colleges in the United States and Great Britain. Dr. C. K. Clarke, dean of the Faculty of Medicine, hopes that the change will give the students a broader and more comprehensive knowledge of the whole subject of medicine. Whether the standard of entrance will be raised or not has not yet been decided, but the first year will be really what is known as a premedical year. It has been stated in some quarters that graduation should be the standard of entrance to medicine as is the case at Johns Hopkins University. As far as known at present, in physics, chemistry and biology the course of study will be much amplified.

CHICAGO, Oct. 17.— Lightness of world shipments had a bullish effect yesterday on wheat, and so too did a big decrease in the amount of wheat on ocean passage. Opening prices were here which ranged from 1 1-8c to 1c higher with December at 137 7-8 to 138 1-4, and May at 137 7-8 to 139, were followed by a reaction, but then another upturn.

OBITUARY

LATE MRS. JOHN CURTIS.

(Port Hope Guide)

We are called upon to pay our tribute of respect to one of Port Hope's most esteemed citizens, Mrs. John Curtis, who passed peacefully away Sunday after a lingering illness. A kind and worthy lady, a true friend and helpful neighbor, the late Mrs. Curtis was beloved for her many qualities of mind and heart, and Port Hope and neighborhood are to-day the better by the influence of her life. She had a very sweet disposition and a kind word for everybody and about everybody; with her passing away there has been removed one that made life more pleasant and helpful for all those who had the pleasure of her acquaintance. The late Mrs. Curtis was an active worker in the Methodist Church and all its branches, and her wise counsel and ever ready assistance will be greatly missed.

Her husband, two sons, Walter and Fred L. and two daughters, Mrs. W. J. Kent, Peterborough, and Mrs. John P. B. Sutherland, New York are left to mourn the loss of a kind and loving help mate, and a most affectionate mother.

Ladies, before selecting their Hats, are invited to inspect Misses Ennis & Armstrong's New Fall Styles. Corner of George and Simcoe Streets, upstairs. 8d-t-f-T9

DUTCH GO FISHING AGAIN.

Celebrate Agreement With Britain as to Exports.

SCHEVENINGEN, Netherlands, Sept. 5.— (Correspondence).— Flags are flying all along the Dutch coast in celebration of the agreement arrived at with Great Britain on the herring fishery question. When England's blockading warships some months ago began to take the Dutch smacks and luggers into British ports, on the ground that 90 per cent. of their catches was presumably destined for Germany, popular resentment in Holland rose to a high pitch. Fishing in the North Sea for a time practically came to a standstill.

The relief felt at the conclusion of the agreement is great. The hundred or so detained craft have already been released by the British authorities, and the entire Dutch fishing fleet of a thousand vessels is to be entirely free to again carry on its operations in the North Sea, with the exception of the "forbidden zone."

Britain's conditions, stipulated with the Dutch fishing interests, for the Netherlands Government had nothing to do with the negotiations, are that from Sept. 1 until the end of the war the catches shall be placed on the open market as heretofore but that not more than 20 per cent. thereof shall be sold to Germany. Home consumption will take another 20 per cent while England reserves the option to purchase a further 20 per cent. at prices ruling for Dutch buyers. The remaining 40 per cent. may be disposed of to any and all countries not at war with Great Britain, and the British authorities bind themselves to pay the substantial subsidy of 30 shillings per barrel of 115 kilograms thus sold to compensate for the higher prices that might have been obtained from Germany, reserving the right to do this in Treasury notes of a year's term. Further, the owners whose ships were taken in are compensated for any damage incurred to nets and boats during such operation, while permission is again given to draw from England all the nets and other fishing gear required.

As regards the fresh seafish branch of the fisheries, a separate agreement has been concluded, by which 30 per cent. of the catches is to be reserved for home consumption, and of the remaining 70 per cent. half will go to Britain, and half to Germany. The British dealers will buy in the open market in competition with the German, but certain maximum prices have been fixed in the case of the fresh fish, any margin above which will be made good to them by the fishing craft owners.

Judging from the fact that 145,000 tons of salted herring and fresh fish were shipped to Germany last year by the foregoing ingenious compromise, Britain will manage to intercept over 100,000 tons of fish food a year that previously went to help provision the besieged Central Powers.

Foreigners Must Get Full Menu Is Order Throughout Germany

Well Informed Neutral Who Has Closely Observed the Food Situation in the Empire Explains the Conditions That Exist and Shows Why the Army Comes First, the People Last.

RESTRICTIONS CAUSED BY WAR

LONDON, October 18.—A well informed neutral, who has had many opportunities of studying the food question in Germany and the efforts that have been made during the war to impress neutrals with the economic situation in the country, writes that nothing has given rise to a greater number of ill considered and ill informed statements than the food question, as it has been described by certain newspaper correspondents.

It is not merely, he says, the numerous "special correspondents" who have been responsible for this piffle—persons usually not knowing a word of German and but a thimbleful of French, who have spent a few days in the Swiss capital or one of the German speaking Swiss frontier towns. Scarcely less guilty have been the so-called neutral correspondents sent by certain newspapers to German to ascertain how matters stood there with regard to food.

For instance, more than one neutral correspondent has given glowing descriptions of the excellence and abundance of the meals served in German hotels, arguing that no scarcity prevails. Now, the fact is that more than a year ago, when food distribution first began to be strictly regulated and food tickets were introduced, the German Hotel Keepers' Association sent a deputation to the Home Secretary to ask him what they were to do with regard to foreign visitors. The Minister's reply was:—

"Foreigners must get full menus, and at all costs must be prevented from noticing any scarcity."

Every hotel keeper, therefore, at whose hotel foreigners resort is entitled to receive supplies sufficient to enable him to set before them a menu such as will cause them to go on their way rejoicing and tell every one they meet that they had most excellent meals in Germany and that no lack of food prevails there.

JUSTIFICATION OF PIRACY.

It is true in one sense that Germany is really short of food, but not in the sense that actual hunger prevails, except among the poorer classes in large towns and cities. What Germany herself says about her food supply need not be taken too seriously, for when she sinks a neutral ship with numbers of women and children on board she immediately justifies her action by saying that England is starving German women and children: when for purposes [illegible] she desires to impress upon some neutral country that the blockade has not affected her she pretends that her own harvest will be quite sufficient to tide her over the coming winter and spring; and when she wanted her own people not to be dismayed by Roumania's entrance into the war and the cessation of supplies from that source she at once issued a statement insisting upon the extraordinary abundance of her harvest this year. This last statement, indeed, served a double purpose, in that it was also intended to arouse enthusiasm for the fourth war loan, now being raised.

Collating all the evidence he has in his hands, this well informed neutral says that conditions in Germany differ much in different districts. For instance, in Bavaria, especially in the country parts, there is no scarcity or but little, whereas in North Germany and in the Westphalian mining districts there is far more, and in the case of the working population in large centres, such as Hamburg, Berlin, Bremen and Delpsic, positive distress. Those who have money to spend freely and servants to send out to the shops to wait long hours making purchases for them can still live in comparative comfort. It is unlikely that either their health or the health of their children will permanently suffer.

Quite otherwise are the circumstances, however, of many millions of working class and lower middle class people in Germany, the wives and families of men serving in the army or killed or disabled in the war. Such women have often serveral young children to bring up and are therefore not able to earn, while they have nothing to depend upon but the government grant, which is mostly inadequate.

One case worth citing, because it must be typical of so many others, which is given by the Hamburger Echo, is that of the wife of a Hamburg working man, now in the army. This woman is left with a family of seven children between the ages of two and eleven, for whom she has to provide food and clothing upon 80 marks a week, but after paying into a compulsory provident fund she has only 80.80 marks left per week. She feeds her children almost entirely upon soup, potatoes, rice and bread, with a very little meat on Sundays and occasionally a little liver or fish.

THE ARMY COMES FIRST.

It must not for a moment be imagined, says this neural informant, that this distress among the lower classes in Germany is going to exert any decisive influence upon the progress of the war. What to the German government is of paramount importance is to feed the army, and this it succeeds in doing, although possibly not so well as it might like. The last line soldiers behind the front are certainly not well fed. Nevertheless, although the blockade may not and will not bring war to a close, it is felt, and felt keenly, in Germany.

No better proof of this can be given than the pressure which she has recently endeavoured to exert upon Switzerland in particular and neutral countries in general in order to force them to supply her with foodstuffs and certain raw materials as compensation for the coal and iron with which she principally supplies them, and thus to a certain extent break through or neutralize the effects of the British blockade. Being unable to procure enough foodstuffs and raw material she says to her neutral neighbours: Procure them for me, or I will cease sending you products absolutely indispensable to you.

Take, for instance, Switzerland. The Allies supply her or allow her to supply herself with the food and raw materials she needs for her own requirements; but Germany has been trying her best to induce the Swiss to supply her with goods which they can obtain, directly or indirectly, through the Allies only. She even had the meanness to instigate her agents to buy up several million francs' worth of goods, including foodstuffs, in Switzerland—goods which the Swiss needed for their own consumption and the export of which is prohibited by the government; and after her agents had stored these goods for a considerable time Germany now has the audacity to tell the Swiss that they belong to her, and therefore should be allowed across the frontier.

All this proves that she is restless under the restrictions caused by the war and would fain do away with them, and that it is to the Allies' interest if possible to tighten these restrictions. But this must never be construed as an indication that the German government finds them unbearable. As for the people, they were content even before the war to accept government-made opinion and maxims, and they are ceaselessly told to "durchhalten"—hold out. In some countries placed in the condition of Germany revolution might be possible, even probable; but in Germany it is not, and this because of the German view, instilled into every German subject, of the absolute supremacy of the State and the complete subordination of the individual thereto.

BY ARNOLD FREDERICKS

"Nevertheless, I think that you will find that the information I have just given you is correct."

The captain seemed by no means convinced. "Are you also engaged upon the case, M. Lefevre?" he asked.

"I have been asked by the officials of the steamship company to render them any assistance that I can. You can well understand that as prefect of the city of Paris I do not usually concern myself with matters of so trivial a nature. I am sure, Mr. Wood that you will so soon succeed in placing under arrest the guilty person that any assistance from me will be quite needless. As a matter of fact, I have interested myself in the affair largely as a favour to my friend Mr. Richard Duvall. You may, perhaps, know him?"

"Duvall! Oh, yes. I've met him. Clever chap, in a way. Rather theoretical, to my way of thinking, but then I'm a practical man myself. Brought up in the old school." He smiled rather complacently.

"Ah, yes." You began as a roundsman, or was it a patrolman, some six years ago, did you not? Took quite an important part in the suppression of the Black Hand outrages last year. I have heard of you."

The captain seemed both pleased and astonished that his record should be so well known even in far-away Paris. "You have a wonderful system in your country," he remarked as he left. "Astonishing!"

Lefevre smiled as the man went out. Then he went into his bedroom and began to change his clothes.

Some half an hour later there emerged a studious-looking Frenchman, with grayish hair, spectacles, and a carelessly kept black moustache. He carried a small satchel, and had what appeared to be a roll of music under one arm.

CHAPTER VI.

The Second One-Franc-Piece.

At half-past two that afternoon an Hôtel Rochambeau as M. Raul Du-Hotel Rochambeau as M. Raul Dumas, Paris. He carried a small satchel in his hand and a roll of music under one arm. He chatted with the clerk for a few moments concerning the weather, mentioned incidentally the fact that he was a teacher of music, and repaired to his room.

It was on the third floor, in the rear, a not uncomfortable room, although small. Its size and likewise the price were, the clerk had thought, admirably suited to the purse of a teacher of music.

Upon the wall near the door was an electric push-button, together with a card instructing guests as to the number of rings necessary to summon the waiter, the bell-boy, or the maid. Three rings, it appeared, were required to secure the presence of the latter.

The gentleman who had registered as Raoul Dumas pressed the button carefully three times. In the course of four or five minutes there was a knock at the door, and in a moment there entered an attractive-looking French girl of twenty-three or four, her arms filled with towels. "Bon jour, monsieur," she remarked pleasantly, and began to place the towels upon the tiny wash-stand which stood in the corner of the room.

"Have I the pleasure," M. Dumas inquired, "to address Mlle. Mercier?"

The girl started and turned to her questioner with wondering eyes. "Yes, monsieur," she replied. "But how should you know my name?"

"I was sure I could not be mistaken. Your father has so often described you to me. I came here, indeed, to speak with you."

"My father! You know my father?"

"Very well. We met often in Paris before his death. Like himself, I have the little hobby of collecting old coins."

"Ah!" The girl started violently. "And what then, monsieur? What do you wish with me?"

"I will tell you. A few weeks before your father died he came into possession of a valuable old coin—a one-franc-piece, of the time of the first Napoleon. His first intention was to sell it, and send to you the money—in fact, I offered to buy it from him—for the account of a wealthy patron I occasionally serve in that way. He refused, however, to part with it, claiming that the price I offered was not enough. I was obliged to leave Paris shortly after for several weeks. On my return I was grieved to learn that your father was dead and that he had sent the coin to you. My patron meanwhile increased the amount of his offer and in his anxiety to possess the coin authorized me to come here from Paris and purchase it from you. That, mademoiselle, is my reason for wishing to see you."

The girl drew back, apparently both frightened and confused. "I—I am afraid I cannot sell you the coin," she said.

"Why not, mademoiselle?

"Because—I—I have already received another offer.

"Indeed! Well—these rich Americans get all the prizes. Still, my patron is also a man of wealth. It is possible that he might offer you even more than you have already been offered. What, may I ask, is the price at which you have agreed to sell the piece?"

The girl hesitated, but the frank and kindly manner of her questioner apparently reassured her. "I am afraid I should not sell it at all," she said. "It was a keepsake, that I perhaps should preserve, for the sake of my father's memory. But to-day I received a letter offering me a thousand dollars for the franc. It is a very large sum, monsieur, for a girl in my position. I do not see how I can refuse it."

"A large sum, indeed," agreed M. Dumas pleasantly. "I scarcely think that my patron would pay more. Still, it is possible. May I ask, if it would not be impertinent the name of the gentleman who makes you so fine an offer?"

Again the girl hesitated. "Perhaps I should not tell you that—"

"As you please, mademoiselle. It is entirely a business matter. I asked only because I wondered whether the gentleman in question might not be a dealer in old coins, who is offering you less than it is really worth. There are several in this city, with most of whom I am acquainted by name."

"His name, monsieur, is Vernon."

M. Dumas started back, very much astonished. "Vernon?" he repeated. "And the first name?"

The girl drew a letter from her pocket. "Here is the letter monsieur. Since you were a friend of my father, you will perhaps advise me what I should do."

M. Dumas read the letter without replying. It said:

"My Dear Mlle. Mercier:

"I am informed that you have in your possession a one-franc-piece of the period of the first Napoleon. The matter has come to my attention through the unfortunate death of my brother, George Vernon, formerly purser of the steamship Richelieu. I desire to purchase this piece, and I am authorized to offer you the sum of one thousand dollars for it, provided it is of the date and character represented. If you will bring the coin to my apartment, No—One Hundred and Tenth Street, this evening at nine o'clock I will examine it, and if satisfactory, pay you the money.

"Very sincerely,

"Charles Vernon."

"A very fair offer, mademoiselle," remarked M. Dumas, handing the girl back the letter. "I am afraid I could not make you a better."

"You advise me to accept it, then?"

"Yes, unless, indeed, the coin is an exceptionally fine specimen."

"But, monsieur, I know nothing of such matters. To me it looks like any other franc-piece. Indeed some gentlemen who were here the other day told me it was quite worthless."

"Indeed!" remarked M. Dumas, smiling. "If you care to have me do so, I will examine the piece myself, and give you the benefit of my experience and advice."

"Thank you. It is very kind. If you will wait a few moments I will get it. I have placed it in the hands of the management for safe keeping."

She put down her towels and hurried from the room.

M. Dumas greatly puzzled, walked up and down the little room, gazing curiously at the one-franc-piece he had drawn from his pocket. "Strange, he muttered to himself. Decidedly, this is a most extraordinary case."

In a few moments the girl returned, carrying a sealed envelope, which she at once tore open. Removing from it a one-franc-piece, she handed it to M. Dumas.

The latter took it and, going to the window, proceeded to examine it with great care. His back was, for a moment, turned to the girl. In that instant he transferred the franc-piece he had previously held to the palm of his other hand, and deftly slipped the one the girl had brought him into his waistcoat-pocket. Then he turned.

"It is an excellent specimen, mademoiselle," he said; "but I feel sure that my patron would not be willing to pay more than one thousand dollars for it. Five thousand francs! It is a large sum. I advise you to accept it."

"And to go to this man's apartment? Do you think I can safely do that?"

"Assuredly. The man is evidently a gentleman. He could not wish to do you any harm. In order to be perfectly sure, however, I will, if you desire it, go along and see that nothing happens to you."

"Will you?" The girl eyed him gratefully. "I should be very glad indeed to have your protection. It is very good of you to do this for one whom you do not know."

"I knew your father, my child," said M. Dumas gently. "I will gladly go with you. If agreeable, I will await you at the entrance of the hotel at half-past eight."

"Thank you, monsieur, with all my heart." She made a little courtesy and left the room.

M. Dumas proceeded at once to make a careful examination of the franc-piece which he had taken in exchange for the one in his possession. He went to the window and scrutinized it with the greatest interest in the bright afternoon sunlight, then shook his head dubiously, and put the coin back into his pocket.

A few moments later he left the hotel and proceeded to the address on One Hundred and Tenth Street named in the letter from the man signing himself Charles Vernon.

It proved to be that of a small apartment building, of the sort having artificial palms and much imitation marble in the entrances, with a single bell-boy to operate the elevator and manipulate the telephone switchboard.

M. Dumas as he called himself made inquiry of the boy concerning Mr. George Vernon, "the purser of the Trans-atlantic Liner Richelieu," he explained.

"No, boss, he ain't in," the boy informed him. "He's daid."

"Dead?" M. Dumas pretended to be vastly surprised. "My old friend Vernon dead! Impossible!"

"He's shore dead, boss. Day brung his body up from de steamer to de undertaker's on de next block yestiddy. He was buried dis mawnin'. Was jes' me, one to go to de funeral 'cept his brother and some of de steamboat people."

"His brother? I never heard that he had a brother."

"Neither did I, boss; but he just come in late yestiddy afternoon and took charge. He had de key to Mr. Vernon's apartment. I guess he his brother, all right."

"Is he in now?"

"No, sir. He went to de funeral 'bout twelve o'clock and he ain't got back yet."

"Was Mr. Vernon married?"

"No, sir, leastwise if he was I never heard tell of it. You see, he was away most of de time. I never could see why he kept a place here just for de little while he was on shore."

M. Dumas gave the boy a quarter. "I am much obliged to you, my boy," he said. "As a matter of fact, I was thinking of renting an apartment of this sort myself, and I wanted to be near my friend Vernon. Have you any to let?"

"Not a one. House is full up. You might try de Wilworth, across de street."

"Thank you." He gave the boy another quarter. "When Mr. Vernon returns you need not say anything about my having called. I want to surprise him."

The boy's eyes glistened at the sight of the second quarter. "All right, boss," he grinned. "I got ynh."

Promptly at half-past eight M. Dumas reached the entrance of the Hotel Rochambeau and found Mlle. Mercier waiting for him. She was quietly dressed in black and, with the Frenchwoman's unerring taste in such matters, looked very sweet and charming. M. Dumas bowed gallantly and complimented her upon her appearance as they made their way across to the subway station at Twenty-third street.

CAPTAIN ROSE IN A HURRIED CALL ON WOMAN IN NEWPORT

NEWPORT, R.I., Oct. 18. — Although Captain Hans Rose, of the U-53, was in this port only a few hours he found time to call with two of his crew upon Mrs. Noah Thompson, whose husband keeps a little variety store at No. 708 Thames street.

When interviewed Mr. Thompson said:—"Yes, it is true that Captain Rose called on my wife. At the time I was in Middletown. You ask me why he called here and I tell you that it is because Mrs. Thompson is a German and is constantly in touch with that country. She has forty-two nephews in the war, and we have frequently sent tobacco and other articles to them. One has been captured by the Russians and is in a Siberian prison. All the others are still alive."

"How is it that Captain Rose knew where to find Mrs. Thompson and came direct to the house without trouble?" he was asked.

"Well, you see Mrs. Thompson is from a prominent family in Germany, she is related to the family of Honorable von Buelow, and she is well known in Germany."

Mrs. Thompson's maiden name was Wilhemina Christina Henrietta Schell, and she came from Schdeswig-Holstein. With her husband she owns a small establishment in the lower part of the city.

One feature of the episode is that although she is the only woman called upon by the sailors the news of the call was not divulged until Wednesday. Captain Rose was said to have come ashore in civilian clothes, and hastily taken a taxicab from the Ann street pier.

Mr. Thompson acknowledged that his wife was constantly mailing matter to Germany.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

UNDER SIXTY FEET OF ICE

By M. QUAD

Copyright, 1914, by Associated Literary Press.

In the year 1905 an English scientific society fitted out what was known as the Cherry Island expedition. It was purely in the interest of natural history. Certain fish and birds which had become extinct in the south were still to be found up there, according to the reports of whalers, and that was the object in fitting out the brig Athelstane for a voyage from London. Aside from a strong handed crew, three professors and four or five students accompanied the expedition, and after a voyage almost without event we reached Cherry Island soon after the beginning of its brief summer.

The island, which is of volcanic origin, is a mere jumble of rocks. It is eleven miles long by five in breadth and at the time of our visit had no trees higher than ten feet. These grew between bowlders and on the slopes, with patches of coarse grass all about, but there was not a level spot half an acre in extent on the whole island. We had been on the island about thirty days and had pretty thoroughly explored it when Professor Saunders and my humble self met with an accident one day which led to a most strange discovery. We had set off together on a hunt after birds' eggs, and in walking along a slope we struck a spot overgrown with a short green weed. As we walked over this bed we suddenly found ourselves slipping. There was water under it, and the whole mass gave way and sent us sliding into a ravine. We went slipping, sliding, clutching and bumping a full fifty feet before we brought up, but neither of us was hurt beyond a few bruises. Owing to the wet grass we could not clamber out at that spot and so continued on down the ravine.

It was a tedious journey we made, but it ended at last at a wall of ice within half a mile of the surf. At that point the depth of the ravine was about a hundred feet and through the sun was shining above, it was like evening down there. A few yards before we were brought to a standstill we found the body of a man lying against the wall of a rock on the right hand side and ten feet above our heads. It was caught and held fast on a point of rock. We were both a good deal startled by the gruesome sight.

"At some time or other," said the professor as he looked about, "this ravine had been a creek of considerable size flowing down to the sea. This man came up the creek from the beach, but we now find a wall of ice blocking it up. There should be a boat frozen up in the wall between us and the sea."

We had nothing to make a torch of, and, retracing our steps to a point where we could climb out of the ravine, we left the mystery to be solved another day. There was much discussion around the campfires that evening, and early next morning we set out to see if the ravine had once upon a time opened to the sea. We soon found that it had. Its mouth had been on a small bay, but a storm had filled it with bowlders and dammed back the waters flowing down. Between the sea and the spot where we found the body the ice was from fifty to seventy feet thick. If the sun melted it for a few feet in the summer the rains and snows of winter speedily replaced what had been lost. We found this ice as clear as glass and as hard as iron, but powder was brought from the brig and holes were drilled, and in a couple of days we had blasted out a great rift to half its depth.

Everybody had a suspicion of what was frozen in down there, but yet the discovery gave us a shock. When but thirty feet of ice lay between us and the bottom of the ravine we could see through it well enough to make out the hull of a ship standing on an even keel. It was the hull of a brig, with masts gone, but otherwise intact. We could even make out the ropes, which had been frozen stiff as iron while they streamed along her decks, but there were no bodies of dead men in sight. To blast out the remaining depths of ice and clear the ravine was a task requiring more aid than we could spare and more powder than we had aboard.

Years before, perhaps half a century, a merchant vessel had made that little bay in distress. Wave and tide had carried her up the creek, and wave and tide had blocked her exit.

If one of the crew got away up to the ravine, why not all of them? And yet no other body or remains were to be found on the island. This man, who may have been the captain, probably started out by himself to see if there was a chance of escape, but in making his way up the ravine he perished of cold and hunger. There was scarce a hope for the others. If they left the hulk they were forced to return to it for shelter and food. There came a day when food and fuel were exhausted, when avalanches of snow covered the decks and the cold of winter froze the maggots of their bouts, and they hid away in forecastle and cabin and died with open eyes staring into the darkness. Upon our return to London the case was reported and made much of in the papers, but no government, or individual has ever gone further than we did. A hulk like there full of dead men—a hulk which sailed the waters of the frozen seas half a century ago—and there it will lie until time is no more and chaos rules again. It might [illegible] but of what use? The loosening of one cog-wheel of the sun more or less would [illegible]

FIGHTING MEN AT PLAY

How The "All Blacks" Beat The "Springboks"

There was an afternoon of outdoor relaxation, wholesome entertainment and sport at the Richmond Athletic Ground, when the "All Blacks" from the New Zealand contingent and the "Springboks" from the South African force played the Rugby match of the season and the "All Blacks" after a great struggle won a narrow victory by the advantage of a try that was converted against a try that was not. Every player was a fighting man. The game they were playing was not merely a game but a part of the hard physical exercises that are gone through in the preparation for war and an exhibition of the splendid physical fitness, the skill and strength and endurance that they will take at the front. Spectators, for the most part, if they were not wearing uniforms of khaki or of the hospital blue that is so honourable if so hideous, were either [illegible] and enthusiastic young women or proud and admiring elderly men.

It was an afternoon of sport that needed to make no apologies for itself as an exhibition, and it was a magnificent match. The New Zealanders, eager and active and fine resourceful in combination, fleet of foot and quick in passing; the South Africans powerful of build, mighty in the "scrum," terrible in the tackle, strong and sure of foot in the long kicks, were ideally contrasted antagonists, and if they showed some difference in style there was nothing to choose between them in the spirit and resolution with which they played the game out to the end. When the match was over an elated young New Zealander in khaki was talking to a group of English friends. "The Germans!" he was heard saying. "You need not worry about them. Why! We have just beaten the South Africans."

PHOTOGRAPHER IS HERO OF AVIATORS

Low-flying Made Necessary by Clouds and British Airmen Fly Lowest Of All

Nevertheless it is not the score of personal successes in combat which give the measure of heroism in air service in war. Personally, if there were a scale of merit, I should put the aerial photographers first, writes an English expert. Consider their task. Very often they are called upon to act at the very crisis of an engagement, when, to their great danger, they will be "the cynosure of neighbouring eyes." They have one set little piece of ground over which to work, and they must fly at a moderately low altitude, taking the summit of risk all the time. Immelmann and his fellows can dive home if they will with a bundle of fairy tales, with conjectures as to the billet of their bullets and the fate of the enemy.

British Supreme

No vagueness is left to the photographer. He hurries home, his plate is developed, and he knows before the sun is high whether he is going to receive "a banquet or a punch." Generally he gets the bouquet, but it does not come from the members of a large house. His photographs are, of course, private and confidential and his work is, in a sense journeyman's work, very sound but not at all spectacular.

On behalf of our air photographers it should be set down publicly to their credit that they are supreme. Undoubtedly and in the belief of specialists they take the best photographs yet seen. But if any better photographs have been made than those brought back soon after dawn in the fights at St. Eloi and the Hohenzollern Redoubt they must be very good indeed.

Below 1,000 Feet

The mark of the flying of the British air-man as contrasted with the German has been the readiness on due occasion to fly low. One of the most courageous enterprises was the patrol, the chase of one of our reconnaissance machines over the German lines at so low an altitude that the enemy's "Archies" did not cease fire till their ammunition was exhausted. In two of the most heroic deeds of the war our men came down to within 200 ft. of their target and made sure of the bull's-eye. This low flying is more often than may be thought a necessary manoeuvre if any offensive flying is to be undertaken at all. On many comparatively fine days the clouds will come down to levels considerably below 1,000 feet and no man can fly for a long space within cloods. Even a bird will lose direction in a mist; and if the airman has the advantage over the bird in his possession of a compass he has much more trouble than the bird in discovering whether he is flying upwards or downwards.

"Fritz" Died Hard

Here is a glimpse of the Canadians at Hillebeke: On the edge of crater the bodies were seen of a Highland sergeant-major of the Mounted Rifles and two privates of the Princess Patricia's. Lying around them and beneath them were the bodies of no fewer than twelve Germans whom they had slain with the bayonet.

BRAVE GENERAL'S END

Staff Travelled All Night For Mercer's Burial

Details of the death and burial of Major-Gen. M. S. Mercer were conveyed in a message from the Canadian representative in the field. It stated: "The body of Major-Gen. Mercer was removed from a demolished dug-out in the Armagh Wood. All the buttons and decorations on his tunic had been cut off, but rank badges had not been touched. Examination showed that the General had been severely wounded in the leg and had also received bullet wounds in the head either of which would have been sufficient to cause death. Gen. Mercer's body was carried back and buried in a military cemetery close to Poperinghe. A large number of officers, including the corps commander and the late General's staff, attended the funeral. Some of the latter had travelled all night."

Recruiting Russians

Rev. Michael Katmakan, rector of the Russian Orthodox Church and S. T. Adalis, Polish interpreter in Toronto, addressed men of Russian and Polish birth in their own tongue in response to the call from the 204th Battalion for recruits to join a Russian platoon. Capt. "Joe" Lawson, paymaster of the 204th, also made a stirring appeal, which was interpreted by Mr. Adalis. Pte. Joseph Markiff also spoke to the Russians. About 300 were present at the meeting.

Religious Retreats Replace Theatres, Cricket and Golf Says Bishop of Worcester

NEW YORK, Oct. 16.—The immemorial French "week-end" remains an institution despite the war, but instead of being a period for sport and social activity it has become for many British men and women a season of religious observance, according to the Right Rev. Huyshe Wolcott Yeatman-Biggs, Bishop of Worcester, who is in this country to attend the general convention of the Protestant Episcopal church in St. Louis. Week-end retreats for persons of all classes have already superceded week-end pleasure parties, he said.

The Bishop also opened another view of English psychology in a discussion of the war, saying that Englishmen and women did not hate their enemies, although they considered that the Teutonic nations had not been fair. The Rev. Dr. J. H. Greig, Archdeacon of Worcester, who is travelling with the Bishop as his chaplain, in an interview, amplified this thought by explaining that the English people, as he had observed them, regarded the war, from one point of view, as a great game which should be played in the traditional English spirit of sportsmanship, and he said that the English conviction that Germany had not been sportsmanlike in the game of nations was the factor which influenced Englishmen in their feeling that diplomatic and commercial relations should not be resumed with their enemy after the war. Hatred, he said, was not the predominating influence.

CHANGE IN ENGLAND'S LIFE.

The Bishop of Worcester opened his interview with a discussion of the changes that had come over England since the beginning of the war. He said:

"English life has undergone an extraordinary change since the beginning of the war. When one reflects upon conditions as they were before 1914 it is hard to realise that we are living in the same country, the habit of life and the habit of thought are so completely altered. A few external facts prove this inward change. For example, take that English institution—cricket. Everyone knows what a prominent place in English life cricket formerly held. Yet cricket has now been abandoned in England, except by soldiers and school boys. All of the cricket fields are closed save those at boys' schools and those situated conveniently for soldiers. One may say that, as far as the great English public is concerned, there is no cricket in the country.

And the same is true of golf. Hundreds and hundreds of golf links where before the beginning of the war players used to stand in long lines waiting for chances to play, are now absolutely deserted. No one plays golf any more.

"The theatres, too, would be closed were it not for officers home on leave. One seldom goes to a play now for his own entertainment. The London audiences are almost entirely made up of parties arranged for the entertainment of officers at home for brief periods.

"No law or proclamation has caused English people to turn from their former social indulgences. Of course the numbers available for these things have been reduced by the demands of the war, but those who are available have given up the sports and entertainments of other pursuits. Many of the things that formerly occupied much time and attention among Englishmen have simply become inharmonious with the new habits of life and thought. They don't fit, that's all.

GREAT SPIRITUAL AWAKENING.

"And as former customs and practices have been discontinued, other activities and interests have seized the English mind and heart. Most striking among the recent developments is the religious or spiritual awakening of the people that has begun to be so notable. There is no doubt, it seems to me, but that England is at the dawn of a great religious revival that will spread in all directions over a great field. This revival, in all of its extent and influence, may not reach its height for years, for no great religious movement comes suddenly. It always begins with a growing religious intensity among those who normally care about religion, and after this intensity has continued and increased to a high degree among the comparatively few who are always in sympathy with the Church, it spreads to the outer world of habitual religious indifference, and then becomes a revival of the whole people.

"This intensity is already impressively manifest among the normally religious, and even among some others. These are experiencing the awakening now which will sooner or later arouse all.

"One of the evidences or symptoms of this religious intensity is the enormous increase in the number of people who make use of retreats. And the number of retreats held has grown in proportion to those seeking them. Our own diocese only reflects conditions everywhere. My own residence, Hartlebury Castle, was given up entirely to retreats last summer. Retreats were held in many other places—some of which would have been considered odd before the war.

NO WAR SENTIMENT IN RETREATS.

"Each of these retreats is either a week-end retreat for busy men and women, or else lasts for from three to four days, and, except in the first and last hours of each, there is no social intercourse, among those participating in them. There are half a dozen services and three addresses each day, and the remaining time is spent in silent prayer and meditation.

The war plays almost no direct part in the retreats. The usual prayers for the sick and wounded are read and God is asked to bless and prosper our armies according to His wisdom, but there is no discussion of the war and the retreats are never made occasions for patriotic or political demonstration or appeal. They are religious gatherings of persons seeking spiritual communion with God and nothing else.

"One of the characteristics of these retreats is the manner in which the people go to them simply under religious inspiration. Social and political differences disappear. Persons of all classes meet and mingle without regard for distinction of class. At one retreat in Hartlebury Castle, for example, side by side were the owner of quite a well-known castle who came in his motor car and a man from the coal pits. I have often seen doctors, magistrates, farmers, and labourers seated at the same table. And the same religious democracy is noticeable at the retreats of women, which are held apart from those of men.

Another evidence of the spiritual awakening is in the number of soldiers presenting themselves for confirmation. In hospitals, convalescent camps, villages, and everywhere soldiers are seeking confirmation in great numbers.

A third evidence is the increased attendance at communion services. Despite the fact that in every parish the war has drawn away a great many persons, thus materially reducing the number of communicants, the actual attendance at communion since the beginning of the war far exceeds the attendance before the war. And similarly the attendance at week day services has greatly increased.

NO POLITICAL PARTIES NOW

Changing the subject to politics, the Bishop said:

"Of course, there are no more political parties in England. Persons are no longer Liberals and Conservatives—but Englishmen. There have been only three or four contested elections since the war began. By agreement between both of the great parties, whenever the seat of a Liberal becomes vacant it is filled by another Liberal, and the vacant seat of a Conservative is filled by another Conservative."

Asked the English estimate of Lloyd George, the Bishop said:

"Like everyone else he has matured greatly. He has mellowed and has become much more the statesman and much less the politician. Consequently he is highly admired by Conservatives as well as the Liberals, and is no longer considered a dangerous radical."

The feeling for Germany in England is not one of passionate hatred, the Bishop said.

"I see no evidence of hatred in England," he continued. "You know, we English are not good haters. You may discuss the war for hours with Englishmen of all classes and hear no abuse of our enemies. Even now the sporting spirit of England is strong. We believe in playing the game fairly and in winning by every proper means but we don't believe in vilifying our opponents. Of course, we believe that our cause is just, and we never doubt and never have doubted our final success, but we are playing the game like sportsmen."

The Bishop said also that while the English blamed the military class of Germany for the war and not the German masses, it was "not easy to draw very fine distinctions between one class and another in a united nation."

AMERICA'S TROUBLES UNDERSTOOD.

Asked what was the attitude of England toward America, the Bishop said that no well-informed Englishman failed to see many important advantages to the Allies in American neutrality.

"Over and above the large flow of munitions," he said, "great advantage has accrued from the action of America in Germany as regards English prisoners and persons interned in German camps. The work done by United States officials in this matter has been invaluable. Nor does any thoughtful Englishman fail to understand that America has problems and difficulties of its own which outsiders can scarcely estimate. Consequently we are not disposed to censure the United States of America for the policy followed.

In discussing the war, the Bishop spoke not only as an observer, but as a participant for two of his sons have enlisted and one of them is now in the Caucasus.

Dr. Greig, in developing the idea of England's sportsmanship in the war, said:

"We don't hate Germany, and it is not hatred that makes us feel disinclined to enter into relations with Germany after the war. Just as our sporting spirit impels us to play the game fairly now, it actuates us to hold ourselves apart from one who has not played, and is not playing, the game fairly. Here's an illustration. I was playing golf with a man once and lost my ball. As I was searching for it, he, with strict enforcement of the rules, suddenly took out his watch and said: 'Five minutes are up. You lose the hole. Here's your ball.' The ball was right at his feet and he had not told me. Well, I haven't played with that man since. I don't hate him. I simply don't want to play with him any more. In a like spirit, when a school football team in England finds that a rival team does not play a sportsmanly game, it simply eliminates that rival from its list of friendly competitors. But there is no hatred.

WANT NO INTERCOURSE WITH GERMANS

"And so it is with Germany. We feel that she did not play the game fairly before the war, and is not playing it fairly now—so we do not wish to have anything to do with her. This includes commercial non-intercourse as well as social. We could not have the one without the other. I am meeting you now in a business way, yet of necessity our meeting is partly social. We shake hands and wish each other well, and we are pleasant in the conduct of our business. Any other condition would be impossible.

"A striking evidence of the fact that hatred of Germany does not dominate Englishmen, and also of the fact that, where our enemies play fair we honour them, was given recently when two Teuton airmen were killed and brought down near my home. The English airmen were united in the desire to bury them with military honours. They said that the German airmen had always shown the sporting spirit, that they had played the game fairly, and that they would ardently oppose any plan to deprive the dead Germans of a military burial. So those two bodies were buried with military honours. They were carried to their graves by English airmen."

SAGE TEA TURNS GRAY HAIR DARK

It's Grandmother's Recipe to Bring Back Colour and Lustre to Hair

That beautiful, even shade of dark, glossy hair can only be had by brewing a mixture of Sage Tea and Sulphur. Your hair is your charm. It makes or mars the face. When it fades, turns gray or streaked, just an application or two of Sage and Sulphur enhances its appearance a hundredfold.

Don't bother to prepare the mixture; you can get this famous old recipe improved by the addition of other ingredients for 50 cents a large bottle, all ready for use. It is called Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound. This can always be depended upon to bring back the natural color and lustre of your hair.

Everybody uses "Wyeth's" Sage and Sulphur Compound now because it darkens so naturally and evenly that nobody can tell it has been applied. You simply dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through the hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the gray hair has disappeared, and after another application it becomes beautifully dark and appears glossy and lustrous. This ready-to-use preparation is a delightful toilet requisite for those who desire dark hair and a youthful appearance. It is not intended for the cure, mitigation or prevention of disease.

CLUNG FOR HOURS TO DECK.

Seven Members of Schooner Crew Picked Up At Sea.

BOSTON, Oct. 7.—The seven members of the crew of the schooner Peter C. Schultz which was abandoned at sea in a sinking condition a week ago arrived here yesterday on the steamer Governor Cobb, from Yarmouth, N.S. The sailors were picked up off their vessel when she was on th point of foundering, by the Gloucester fishing schooner Patriot. Capt. H. H. Lawson was injured in jumping from the wreck to the rescuing boat.

The Schultz left Elizabethport N.J., Sept. 29, for Halifax, laden with coal. On October 9, in a northeasterly gale, the sails were torn to pieces, and the mountainous seas that raked the decks smashed the boats and left the men without means of escape. They had been clinging to the decks for eleven hours when rescued.

VICTIM OF X-RAY.

Pioneer in Science May Lose His Right Hand.

New York, Oct. 7.—Dr. Francis Le Roy Satterlee, jr., pioneer maker of X-ray pictures, is to undergo another operation to-day in an effort to check a disease he contracted in his scientific researched.

Dr. Satterlee decided that he must have the stub of the second finger of his right hand amputated. Two joints of this finger had been cut off in previous operations.

X-ray burns, he said, caused a disease known as keratosis. It causes wart-like growths, and has been known to develop into cancer.

"If the joint of my finger to be removed on Tuesday shows symptoms of cancer," said Dr. Satterlee, "I shall have to have my hand amputated."

WINNIPEG, Man., Oct. 17.—Winnipeg trainmen from all parts of the Canada Pacific Railway System arrived here on Sunday, and are all busy yesterday counting ballots cast during three weeks to reach decision as to the feeling of the men toward calling a strike and indications are that the men favour a strike.

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

LADY'S BLOUSE.

By Anabel Worthington.

7,022

You can begin with this waist in planning the number you will need for fall. It is one of the new designs and strongly speaks style with its serviceable cut.

The distinguishing feature is having the back and yoke in one piece, and it is of interest that the fronts may roll back as far as the gathers to give the revers, or the right may lap the left front, as illustrated. When the fronts roll back the neck may be filled in with lace or other soft, frilly material, and if silk is used to develop the design one will have a lovely afternoon blouse.

Novelty is provided in the collar, which is high at the back and cut away in front; wire is used to keep it as high as the ear line. The sleeve is made noticeable with Tuliness below the elbow. This fulness is gathered into a cuff that is button trimmed; buttons in a larger size decorate the front of the blouse.

Taffeta, satin, pongee, poplin, linen and like fabrics, of heavy rather than light texture, are to be considered for developing this design.

The pattern, No. 7,022, is cut in sizes 36 to 42. To make in size 36 will require 3¼ yards 36 inch material.

You may obtain the pattern by sending to the office of this publication.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required, and age of a child.

Price 15 cents, or 2 for 25 cents.

ALLIES HOLD ALL GROUND GAINED

Athens Practically Under Martial Law

ENEMY ATTACKED ON THE WHOLE CARPATHIAN FRONT BUT FAILED

Bucharest Reports Austro-German Assaults Unsuccessful While Roumanians Have Assumed the Offensive at the Predeal Pass in Spite of Bad Weather---British Progressed Along the Albert Bapaume Road--French Hold All Gains in Spite of Hot Attacks.

VENIZELOS ASKS RECOGNITION BY ALLIES

BUCHAREST, October 18.—Austro-German troops have launched an attack on the whole Carpathian front, it was officially announced to-day Thus far the attacks have been unsuccessful and all the news from the front is reported reassuring. In the region of the Predeal Pass, south of Kronstadt the Roumanians resumed the offensive and drove the enemy back upon the Transylvanian slope where stubborn fighting is progressing.

PARIS (French Official Communique), October 18.—German troops launched a violent attack against the French positions south of the Somme at five o'clock this morning after a heavy bombardment. A few German detachments reached the French first line trenches, but were all either killed or captured, the War Office announced. Another attack was checked by screen fire.

The German assaults south of the Somme followed three heavy unsuccessful attacks north the river late last night. The Germans attempted to oust the French from those parts of Sailly-Saillisel captured in this week's fighting, but were repulsed with heavy losses, the French maintaining their positions. South of Avre and southeast of Reims, French detachments cleaned up enemy trenches.

ATHENS PRACTICALLY UNDER MARTIAL LAW

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

ATHENS, October 18.—Athens is to-day virtually under martial law. All sorts of alarming rumours are in circulation, but cool heads are attempting to prevent a clash between the French sailors and civilian demonstrators that would develop into street fighting with the most serious consequences. Reports that King Constantine has fled are denied by Greek officials. They declare the King returned to Tatoi Palice Monday night. The American Ambassador has declined to interfere.

NEW GOVERNMENT WANTS TO BE RECOGNIZED

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

ATHENS, October 18.—Venizelist leaders to-day decided to call upon the Allies to formally recognize the new provisional government set up at Salonika favouring Greece's intervention in the war. This decision was reached after two days of serious disturbances in the Greek capital, in which mobs threatened to attack the Allied marines. Two diplomatic missions were organized. They will present the case of the provisional government to the Allies declaring that only the formal recognition of this new government will save Greece from utter chaos. Negotiations have been begun informally with the United States to permit the recruiting of Greek armies in America.

GERMAN ATTACKS ALL REPULSED SAYS PETROGRAD

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

PETROGRAD, October 18.—Russian and Austro-German troops are now battling in heavy snows in the Carpathians and southward near the Roumanian frontier, where the Teutons attempted to divide the Russian and Roumanian armies. The War Office to-day announced the repulse of all Teutonic attacks south of Kershmase and also near Dornavatra. North of Kormontza in fierce and obstinate fighting all enemy counter-attacks were repelled. Near Bolshovoce the Teutons also counter-attacked savagely, but were halted by the Russians' fire.

HOME RULE IS ANSWLR TO CONSCRIPTION TALK

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

LONDON, October 18.—John Redmond, the Irish leader, met the demand for conscription in Ireland with a counter demand for Home Rule in Ireland, in an address in the House of Commons this afternoon. An attempt to enforce conscription in Ireland would be fruitless, Redmond declared, so long as England maintains martial law and a Unionist government against the will of the Irish people. Chief Secretary for Ireland Henry Duke responded that it was impossible.

The Irish themselves are responsible for the failure of Home Rule plans, said Duke, adding that Parliament is ready to accept Home Rule in any form if the Irish can reach an agreement.

Barakli Shelled By The British Troops

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

LONDON, October 18.—British artillery successfully shelled the Macedonian town of Barakli Djuma, where Bulgarian movements had been observed on the Doiran front. British patrols were active dispersing enemy working parties.

PARIS, October 18.—Considerable speculation has been aroused here over the arrival of King Alfonso at San Sebastian, Spain, coinciding with the arrival at the same place of the Spanish Ambassadors to France, Russia and Italy.

COL. JOHNSTON IS IN OTTAWA

Developments Are Expected In Local Military Circles According to To-day's Indications—Much Gossip About 235th

BUT NOTHING OFFICIAL

There are no developments in local military circles to-day, although the presence of Lieut.-Col. Johnston of the 247th Battalion in Ottawa, following the visit of Brigadier-General Hemming here yesterday, coupled with the report about the 235th coming here, would lead to the supposition that some developments may be looked for. The slowness in recruiting for the 247th Battalion here and the 252nd in Lindsay is causing comment at headquarters, and the Kingston Standard, usually well informed in military circles, had the following significant paragraph yesterday:

"The showing of the Peterborough battalion, the 247th, is a strange one. This battalion has been in existence for two months, and yet is only able to show 13 men and 9 appointed officers, a total of 21. The 252nd of Lindsay can only boast of a total strength of 23, and it is evident that headquarters will be compelled to take some new steps in connection with the organization of these two battalions. It may be that Brigadier-General Hemming's visit to both these places yesterday and to-day has something to do with this important matter."

In regard to the 235th Bowmanville Battalion, there is still nothing definite to be announced. The situation may be summarized as follows:

The officers and men of the 235th want to come to Peterborough for the winter.

The Peterborough branch of the Speakers' Patriotic League are against the plan, because they believe it would mean the disbanding of the 247th Battalion.

The merchants and business men are inclined to favour the coming of the 235th. The spending of a big pay roll here naturally is a desirable consideration.

Other citizens favour it also, because they believe that the presence of 500 men in uniform with a good band and bugle band would be a fine recruiting medium.

As yet, the whole matter is in the air. The Militia authorities have not made any pronouncement of their intention to send the Bowmanville Battalion here.

The Cheese Board set up another big price this morning when Mr. Kerr of Belleville, bought the entire offering at 21 5-8c., with the usual exception of Selwyn which declines his bids. This is the third successive sale at which Mr. Kerr has swept the board. The factories reported as follows:

CHEESE BOARD HAS DONATED $240 TO RED CROSS FUND

NO FUND THIS YEAR?

The $240 balance of their Patriotic Fund collected last year was contributed by the Cheese Board to the Red Cross Society at this morning's meeting. Secretary Hawthorne was instructed to make out a cheque for that amount to Mr. Peter Campbell, treasurer of the local fund.

This money is the remnant of the sum realized by the cheese factories on the local board last year by the gift of one day's make of cheese. It is generally understood that this patriotic work will be discontinued this season, in other words that there will be no day's make of cheese offered for patriotic purposes. The idea has become unpopular with the factory patrons, one of the members stated this morning, due to the fact that some of the farmers refused last year, and also in the previous year, to participate in this patriotic offering. It was admitted that the number of these persons was comparatively small, but they were few enough to leaven the main body of factory patrons with a spirit of dissatisfaction with this situation that while they themselves were giving a day's make of cheese, the other persons refused to contribute their milk on that day, and probably sent a double shipment if possible, on the following day.

Hence, the Patriotic Fund which the Cheese Board had generously contributed and wisely dispensed during the past two years apparently will be permitted to pass out of existence this year for what some members regard as comparatively trivial reasons when the splendid work the money accomplished in the past and could accomplish again next year, is considered from the board spirit of patriotism and not from the bemeaning standpoint of the unpatriotic.

Another Step in the Construction of a Footbridge Over the Otonabee River.

The Railway Committee of the City Council met last evening to consider a proposed agreement between the city and the C.P.R. respecting the construction of a footbridge across the Otonabee River on the north side of the C.P.R. This by-law was subsequently passed at a meeting of the City Council which was held at the conclusion of the meeting of the Railway Committee.

WEARY IN WELL-DOING.

It would seem as if the liberal-minded patrons subsidiary to the Peterborough Cheese Board were beginning to weary in well-doing under insufficient provocation. For the past two years the patrons have given the value of one day's milk to the Red Cross fund, the amount resulting close to $3,000 for the two years. This was distributed among the various organizations in the county and helped the women to more effectually do their duty, as they are nobly doing, in providing for soldiers' socks and other comforts and articles for Red Cross work, a balance of $265.16, being turned over by cheque to-day to Mr. Peter Campbell, treasurer of the British Red Cross Fund.

This morning it was announced as the decision of the patrons as a whole that the one day contribution of milk would not be continued, the reason given being that some of the patrons point blank refused to do their share. It is questionable if the refusal of the few justified the majority in depriving themselves of the pleasure of absolved them from the duty of doing a splendid and patriotic action, considering the needs and worthiness of the cause affected. The interests of a good cause of any kind should not suffer from general refusal to help them because a few decline to do themselves. If that principle were adopted as the rule, we should have little support for the most worthy objects. As to those of the Cheese Board patrons who decline to continue contributing, they are acting, technically, quite within their rights; but their action seems to have only that justification; for on grounds of gratitude they could well afford to continue their donations. Though field crops have not been quite up to the mark, the dairy business has done well—as witness cheese at near 18 cents per pound, wholesale, on to-day's Board, and milk at 8 cents per quart, not to speak of a dozen eggs, being the value of a dozen oranges, and a pound of butter the price of two pounds of cheese. On the very lowest ground that of balancing a commercial obligation, the refusers should not have refused.

These remnants are, in effect, aiding the enemy of humanity, doing what a German would do if he could, violate a Red Cross emblem or destroy Red Cross hospital supplies. In both the actual and the hypothetical case, our wounded and suffering soldiers are deprived of the means of healing and comfort. Even the feeling of neighbourliness and brotherhood should prompt them to help, for it is a fact that many of the patrons have sons or other relatives at the front or possible and probable need of Red Cross aid, and at least one of them has a son who has laid down his life in fighting for the protection and safety of all of us. A little thing, though it means little in money value, and in the eyes of Him who said—"Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, My brethren, ye have done it unto Me."

A LITTLE EXPLANATORY.

A local contemporary, insanely asserting and untruthfully maintaining that a vote for Laurier is a vote for keeping Canada's navy in a pigeon hole, asks why, if the Canadian navy is in pigeon hole, Sir Robert Borden, when the "sovereign people" under sovereign intuition voted Sir Wilfrid Laurier's government out of office and put the reins of government into the hands of Sir Robert Borden, Sir Robert found nothing for building a Canadian navy, invited and procured by the Laurier government, ready to be accepted, to be used upon.

Though Sir Robert had voted for a Canadian-built navy, and had eloquently advocated the adoption of a policy to that effect—demanding that a navy be "built," to use his own words, "by our own hands by the skill of Canadians"—though he had asked that the construction of the Canadian navy should be suspended by inserting the word "speedy" before "construction"—though he voted with an unanimous parliament in favour of such resolution, yet, when the Laurier Government, in pursuance of the unanimous votes of parliament had secured tenders for Canadian warships—when, by a change of government Sir Robert could put the will of an unanimous parliament into effect, instead of acting on the tenders submitted, he "speedily" pigeon-holed them—put the Canadian navy in a pigeon hole. If he had acted up on the tenders ready to his hand, within the intervening five years, Canada would have had to-day a navy built by herself—built, as Sir Robert Borden eloquently advocated, of "Canadian material and by the skill of our own workmen."

Why did Sir Robert Borden do this—why did he humiliate Canada by letting Australia get ahead of Canada?—Australia, with about half the population of Canada and about half of her resources, adopted about the same time the same naval policy as Canada, and now she has a navy of her own—there are no Nationalists in Australia—a part of the Imperial navy, as Canada's would have been. And a cruiser of the Australian navy scored one of the first and finest naval victories of the war by the capture and destruction of a German raider.

What Australia has done in the matter of a home-built navy, Canada could have done, and would have done, if the Laurier Government had remained in power, and if Sir Robert Borden had carried out the policy he advocated and he and every member of parliament voted for—if he had not pigeon-holed the Canadian navy. Why was this done, Because he loved office more. He could only hold office with a feeling of safety by the help of the Nationalist vote, and he bought it by surrendering a Canadian-built navy. The Nationalists had no "no use for England and the English," much less for a Canadian navy manned by Canadian seamen. So, at the bidding of the Nationalists Sir Robert side-tracked—pigeon-holed—a Canadian navy and substituted a gift of money to build Dreadnoughts, something that Parliament had not unanimously authorized, but something that the Nationalists would favour. Voting money was a "small thing for them; but building a Canadian navy which involved the personal service of Canadians—"to be manned and officered from British warships," they could not stand.

HIGHWAYS AND BYWAYS.

This morning a memoir of the Geological survey, "Road Material Surveys," reached the Examiner Office. This is an additional evidence of the acute interest that is developing in the matter of good roads. This subject is the basis of a good deal of theorizing and some planning. The interest aroused and shown is shared by the Government of this Province, which has adopted, or rather, continued a policy that has been beneficially, if partially, operating for years.

However, a good many of the proposals of theorists and road-authorities, and a good deal of the Government's action fall short of the main thing. The chief cry is for trunk roads and this is the essence of the Government's county road system. We hear talk of a great national cross-continent highway"—from the Atlantic to the Pacific Coast. We have an auto speed-way built between Toronto and Hamilton, very largely at the expense of the whole people. Apart from the benefit local residents get, the stretch of road is in result, built for the benefit of autoists, pleasure seekers. It is not for the general advantage of the province in a way that would justify the expenditure of some $10,000 per mile. A large proportion of which is the people's money, the money of the people who will derive no direct, or even indirect, advantage from it.

Any good roads enterprise that does not take into account the needs of the farmers of the back townships is not in the provincial interests. Trunk lines serve only pleasure travel and a small part of the farming population of the province. A good roads system of provincial extent should take first, or at least concurrent consideration of the needs of the back township farmers; it should include the improvement of the 3rd and 4th back roads, to remove the handicap of those farmers who have long ways to travel to get to their market or to railway stations. For in all the discussions of the good roads problem, this, the main consideration, is only inferentially dealt with—it is only an afterthought instead of being, as it should be, the first thought. A highway from coast to coast, through Canada, would cost for construction alone, at $25,000 per mile of the Toronto-Hamilton auto speed-way, about five million dollars, and apart for tourist travel, would only benefit a fringe of farmers along its route. If this, or similar lines are built, then, a similar expenditure should be made upon other lines

HOW CANADA'S FIRE WASTE AFFECTS PRODUCTION PROFITS

The fire loss of Canada has reached enormous proportions. The drain upon her financial resources constitutes an economic loss which no country can afford and still meet competing nations on an equal footing.

The war has had far-reaching effects upon commerce. European countries, in greater or less degree, are realizing their latent powers, production is being speeded up, resources are being developed, trade openings are being sought and established. Prior to the war Canada found herself handicapped in any scheme of trade expansion by the lower cost of production in Europe. It therefore follows that with the realization by European countries of their commercial possibilities, this trade handicap will be greatly accentuated.

On the basis of averages, and from the data available as to the cost of insurance and upkeep of fire departments, the following comparisons may be deduced:—

For the past three years the average rate for fire insurance in Canada has been $1.18 per $100 of insurance. The average rate in Sweden is .40, in Austria .80, in England .26, in Germany .22, in France .21, in Spain .19, and in Italy .10.

A Canadian employer of labour with 100 employees, carrying an insurance of $50,000 on plant and buildings, and, assuming that $2,000 insurance is carried or paid for by each employee on furniture and dwelling,—or a total of $250,000—would, on the foregoing basis, have to provide in wages and overhead charges $2,950. His competitor in Sweden would only require $1,000, in Austria $750, in England $575, in Germany $360, in France $300, in Spain and Italy $475.

For upkeep of fire departments Canada is heavily taxed in comparison with competing countries. In 1914, Paris, France, with a population of 2,846,986, had a total fire department expenditure of approximately $456,479, or 23 cents per head. Toronto, for the same year, with a population of 470,144, spent $675,146 on her fire department, equal to $1.43 per head.

The Toronto manufacturer — and this is only an example for all Canada —has to provide for himself and family, and for each employee and his family $1.43 to cover the department costs, as against the 23 cents his Paris competitor must provide; or, with an average of two to a family, for his 100 employees, he would have to pay in salaries and wages $722.15 as against $116.15 by her European competitor.

For insurance and upkeep of fire department the Toronto employer of 100 hands is representative of Canadian industry, must pay $3,672 against $464 in Paris, a handicap equal to $30 per employee.

The Census Report of 1911 gives 515,208 as the number of employees engaged in manufacturing in Canada; consequently at $30 per head, there is a handicap of $15,456,000 against Canadian manufacturers in the cost of fire insurance and municipal fire departments.

The salaries and wages paid to these 515,208 employees amounted to $241,006,416, an average of $467.80, or approximately $9.00 per week. The foregoing handicap of $30 per employee represents the wages of 4.3 weeks of each employee.

In 1910 the products of Canadian manufacturers were valued at $1,165,975,639. This charge for insurance and municipal fire protection therefore represents an added tax of 1.3 per cent. upon Canada's entire output of manufactures.

The fact that much the larger portion of this amount is buried in the pay-roll can be accepted as the reason why our employers have given so little attention to the question. The charge must be met, however, whether by direct or indirect means.

Employers complain of the rising cost of manufacturing; employees complain of the rising cost of living and demand increased wages. In view of the foregoing, employers should seriously consider reduction of the burden imposed by the enormous destruction of our created resources by fire—that their earnings may not be reduced by these charges, and thus remove one of our heavy handicaps before Canadian employers and employees meet world competition under the new trade conditions which will develop after the war.—D.

TEST LIQUOR LOOPHOLE.

Toronto Man is Being Prosecuted for Taking Orders.

Hugh McEvoy has the distinction of being the first man to be prosecuted under the Ontario Temperance Act for taking orders for liquor. He was defended by Mr. James Haverson, K.C.

Charles Brnce, a police officer, testified that he had entered McEvoy's store and asked for a certain brand of Scotch whiskey. McEvoy gave him an order form, which he signed without reading, and then McEvoy filled out the blank spaces. He then handed McEvoy 85 cents for the whiskey; two cents for the money order, and three cents for a postage stamp. McEvoy addressed the envelope to the Distillers Distributing Company, Montreal, and gave it to Bruce to mail.

Mr. Haverson claimed that the deal was directly between Bruce and the Montreal firm, and that his client did not take the order. Pending the arrival of the original order form from Montreal, the case was adjourned until next Monday.

SWARMS OF BUTTERFLIES MIGRATING TO SOUTH.

GREENVILLE, S. C., Oct. 14.—Great swarms of butterflies have been seen passing through and over Greenville, making their way southward.

Entomologists say that the butterfly, commonly known as the "milkweed" butterfly, native to the United States, often migrates. It was probably this variety of the insect that passed here, bound from the inhospitable climate of the North to some balmier place.

Such migrations are sometimes caused by the lack of food plants upon which the insects may deposit their eggs, while at other times the trip South is undertaken merely in search of warmer weather. In the tropics migrations of butterflies are often encountered.

PTE. ROY ROBINSON TEELS HOW HE WAS WOUNDED IN CHARGE

Lakefield Boy Gives Thrilling Description of the Advance of the 21st Battalion on Sept. 15th When Eastern Ontario Unit Captured Sugar Refinery.

Pte. J. Roy Robinson of the 21st Canadian Battalion, who was wounded on the 15th of September, has sent the following letter in part, to his parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. P. Robinson of Lakefield.

To my Dear Mother and all the rest.

Well mother while I am laying here, waiting for dinner I will scribble off a few lines to let you know I am doing fine, the very best that can be expected. You will remember that I told you before that when I was wounded my trousers and pockets were so badly torn that I lost all my money, so will you please send me an order for five dollars as soon as possible, as I can't draw any money while in the hospital, and say if you have the casualty list that my name was in (or any other) send it along too, for I want to know how the rest of the boys made out. I don't know whether W. Roland is alright or not. The last I saw of him was a couple of hours before we attacked, when we said good-bye for we knew somebody would be sure to get it. In fact all the day before and that night something seemed to tell me I was going to get it but whether (or not I would be put out of action altogether, I didn't know (but I didn't say so to anybody). It was good day light 6 a.m. when we attacked and our object was a sugar refinery and a little village "Marcelcave" or some such a name about 1,200 yards ahead. We had taken the first line quite easily and when I got mine, was between four or five hundred yards beyond it. The sergeant-major and I were quite near each other at the time and I noticed that our boys had got a little separated from the 20th Battalion, who were on our right, and quite a number of Huns were beating it for the rear of our lines without any trouble, so when I got near enough to shout to him above the din, I showed him the gap and asked him if we hand not better go over and he answered "Yes," and with that I turned and started over and he followed.

We got a little out of wind and I was just going to drop into a shell hole, when everything went a blank. When I came to I heard him say, "Roy, I'm hit!" I knew that I was hit and I saw my little finger hanging by a little bit of skin, but it didn't hurt. The sergeant major got up, he was bleeding at the head, and he started for the rear of our lines. I was going to follow him when I noticed somebody lying dead. I was lucky to be alive. The whiz-bang had hit my rifle, and it was off in splinters. I recognized it by the sling. I started for an advanced dressing station at the rear of our lines (though I never expected to get there) and when I got there I collapsed.

From then on for the next two or three days I did not know very much, but at present there isn't much goes on around me—that I don't know except when I sleep, and the night Sister says I talk in my sleep. Well, there's more than me, for last night I heard a fellow say "No, don't buy pickles!" Ha, ha. It was exactly a year to the very day from I landed in France that I was wounded. Am feeling better every day and hope all are well. Love to all.

OFFICE WAS GUTTED

Special to The Examiner:

LINDSAY, Oct. 17.—When fire gutted the office and plant of the Machine Telephone Automatic early this morning, three hundred telephones were put out of commission. The origin of the fire is unknown, but the damage is great. Owing to a strong gale that prevailed the firemen had great difficulty in confining the fire to the one building. Local Manager D. E. H. Lee, wife and child, had a narrow escape in getting out of their apartments overhead, owing to the electric light current being detached and the dense clouds of smoke. The city office of the Canadian Pacific Railway is in the same block.

Last night between twelve and one o'clock a red haze hung over the city in the clouds' reflection of the burning of the old store at Downer's corners, which has been occupied by Mr. A. W. Paskins, who also conducts an uptown grocery store at the corner of Hunter and Aylmer streets.

Shortly before midnight the family was awakened by the crackling of the incipient fire, which had apparently originated at the back of the storehouse, and by that time had made considerable headway. A strong wind was blowing and in a comparatively short time the whole building was wrapped in flames, which illuminated the surrounding country and sky over a wide area.

The store and residence were all under one roof and were completely wiped out, the entire building with its general stock and furniture. The general merchandise was valued at $4,000, on which Mr. Paskins had $1,500 insurance. The house was the property of Mr. Mat Carton and it is reported to be without insurance.

An Old Hotel.

The old Downer's Corners store was a landmark with a history that began beyond the memory of most of the present generation. According to legend (for that is about the correct term), it was at one time a flourishing hotel in the days of the old Cobourg railway. One gentleman estimated that it could not have been erected less than seventy years ago, and in that lengthy span has experienced a chequered career.

Part of the house was occupied by Mrs. Whatley whose husband joined the colours. A few pieces of her furniture were saved, but everything else was reduced to ashes with the old structure and its many memories.

The cause of the fire is believed to have been from mice nibbling at matches in the storehouse.

An Election In the Air

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

OTTAWA, Oct. 18.—In political circles it is stated that one of the first things the new Governor-General may have brought before him by the Government will be a request that he dissolve Parliament for a general election. Both parties are speeding up operations to some extent. Candidates are being nominated in various parts of the country, and organizations are being tuned up here and there. French Ministers are holding meetings and talking straight politics in the province of Quebec. It is claimed by many that Parliament will be assembled and that the Government will apply to the Opposition for another extension of the term of Parliament with confident expectation that the Liberals will decline. Then an election will be brought on with race, religion, enlistment and other big questions as the chief issues.

A CHANCE TO HELP OUR BOYS AT FRONT

Baseball, Football, Lacrosse Supplies, Checkers, Chess, Dominoes, Mouth Organs Are All in Demand—Anything Out of Which the Boys Can Get Pleasure and Exercise.

Editor of the Examiner:—

Dear Sir,—The Ontario W.C.T.U. in November 1914, became responsible for all the necessary money outlay in connection with the work of a Y.M.C.A., representative in France. In January of 1915, two such men were taken under our care. In all we have had five Y.M.C.A. representatives. Two of these—Capt. Oscar Irwin and Harry Whiteman—died in France. A third was invalided home. We are now supplying all the needed support for Capts. Ed. Archibald and Charters Sharpe.

The following letter from Capt. Ed. Archibald has recently arrived:—

France.

Dear Mrs. Thornley,—I received the marked Testaments and the leaflets O.K., for which accept our hearty thanks.

Having been appointed to oversee the physical recreation and sports for the whole Canadian Corps, I am in position to use anything in the way of outdoor or indoor games—baseball, football, lacrosse, tennis, cricket, chess, dominoes, etc. etc.,—anything out of which the boys could get pleasure and exercise.

I also want all sorts of small musical instruments—concertinas flutes, piccolos, bones, mouth organs, etc.,—for they are a great factor in our entertainments.

We have been having some very trying times lately and have lost a large number of our men. But there must be no pause in our service what ever the casualties.

Yours in the work,
EDWARD B. ARCHIBALD

No one can read the accounts of life at the front without realising the intolerable strain under which our men live. Again and again Capt. Archibald and other Y.M.C.A. workers have mentioned the absolute need for recreation and the soothing, helpful influence of music and games.

In thousands of Canadian homes there are just such unused articles as Capt. Archibald needs. The boys have grown to men and gone their ways out into the world; and the once cherished fife or mouth organ or football, is lying away in some forgotten corner. Look for it, mother dear, and send it to us, that it may help those other brave lads to bear their almost intolerable burdens.

But if you should have nothing of the kind—perhaps the grandchildren have taken possession—and are still minded to help, you can send us the money to buy anything you designate. Should you decide to purchase yourself, please do not get several instruments when the money you expend would procure one article that would give real satisfaction. For, instance, the 25 cents mouth organ is not to be compared with the 75 cent make in tone, range and durability. The key desired is L if that is procurable. Where the keys are alike or can be harmonized, trench concerts can be arranged.

And that box of dominoes or the checker board or chess set—hunt them up and send them along to the City W.C.T.U. Headquarters, 432 Park Ave., London, Ontario, Canada where all the supplies for Capt. Archibald's work are gathered.

Please do not forget the last two items of this address, for since the war began many a letter intended for this town has crossed the ocean.

As fast as enough material is received to fill a barrel, it will be shipped.

Both Capt. Archibald and Sharpe are anxious for Gospel portions. They can also use an unlimited quantity of the specifically prepared soldier's leaflets. These are daintily gotten up and $1.00 buys 50 copies. They carry the good news in winning language and attractive dress.

Hoping that those who can, may help promptly; and on behalf of the Ontario W.C.T.U., heartily thanking you, Mr. Editor for the space so kindly accorded, etc.

(Mrs.) MAY THORNLEY,
President W.C.T.U. Patriotic and Missionary Board,

Hastings Items Of Interest

HASTINGS, Oct. 18.—A wedding of local interest took place on Saturday at the home of Dr. and Mrs. Huycke, the occasion being the marriage of the Dr's youngest sister, to Mr. Calder, of Toronto. The nuptial knot was tied by Rev. Isaac Snell, pastor of the Methodist church, only the immediate friends being present. At the close of the ceremony, congratulations were extended, and the bride led the way to the dining room where a dainty luncheon was served. The happy couple were then escorted to the G.T.R. station, where they boarded the 2.30 train for a short honeymoon trip, followed by the best wishes of a large circle of friends.

The 235th battalion to the number of about 450 have been camped in town for a few days, arriving on Wednesday last from Campbellford. The Battalion is in command of Colonel Schobell and makes a fine appearance when on parade.

On Monday morning the citizens met to give them a rousing cheer before their departure for Rosneath. The band played "Auld Lang Syne" and the bugle band played "The last Post" in honour of our dead heroes after which marching orders were given and the boys in khaki marched away.

Members of the Battalion occupied the pulpit of the Presbyterian and Methodist churches at both services on Sunday. In the Methodist church on Sunday evening the pulpit was ably filled by Captain Clark, pastor of the Bowmanville Methodist church. Some khaki boys also assisted with the music by solos, etc.

The service was one of great profit and pleasure.

Mr. Staples, principal of the Public School as well as the teaching staff attended the Teacher's Convention held in Warkworth during the past week.

Mrs. Parsons, one of the recruiting officers of the 235th, spoke to an assembly of ladies in the I.O.D.E. rooms on Friday afternoon, when she urged the women to rally round the standard and be willing to spend and be spent in the service of the Empire.

The regular monthly meeting of the W.M.S. of the Methodist Church was held on Thursday afternoon in the church parlour. Activities are in progress for the packing of a box of clothing to be sent to the fire sufferers in New Ontario.

Rev. Isaac Snell accompanied by Capt. Clark drove to Warkworth on Friday evening where the Captain addressed a large gathering.

Mr. Gould of the Toronto Branch staff has enlisted with the 235th and will go overseas as a cyclist.

Mrs. Foster of Gravenhurst is a guest of the Misses of her sister, Dr. Huycke.

Mr. and Mrs. T. Watson of Norwood, spent Sunday with Hastings friends.

Miss Mae Huycke has returned from an extended visit with friends in Peterborough.

PTE. LEVI McNAUGHTON, of Young's Point, who is with the 93rd Battalion.

The Authorities in Peterboro' Have Been Advised of the Case—Girl Was Scantily Clad and in a Filthy Condition—Spent the Night in a Barn

LINDSAY, Oct. 17.—Early yesterday morning as Mr. Daniel Murphy of South Ops, near Riverside cemetery, went out to the stables, he was surprised to find a young girl in the barn. She was unable to give Mr. Murphy any information about herself; and was suffering greatly from exposure. She was taken into the house and tenderly cared for by Mrs. Murphy. High County Constable Conquerhood was telephoned for, and on his arrival took charge of the unfortunate girl. She was very poorly dressed—in fact her body was barely covered with apparel, while her boots were unbuttoned.

The girl, who is nineteen years of age, was brought to town and handed over to Mrs. Sharpe, agent of the Children's Aid Society. To Constable Conquergood was telephoned for, and The Margaret Cox Home of Peterborough, stated that she was employed by parties near Keeboro, who had told her that they were going to send her to prison for stealing apples. They frightened her so badly that she ran away from them, and in her wanderings reached Mr. Murphy's farm in an exhausted condition and unable to proceed any farther. She spent the night inside the barn. To the Constable she also told a story of ill treatment and abuse and was anxious to get to the Margaret Cox Home at Peterborough. Judging from her appearance she has undoubtedly been neglected. Her clothes and body were in a filthy condition, and had not been provided with suitable clothing. She reluctantly accepted a coat which Mrs. Murphy kindly gave her, and absolutely refused a gift of money.

The authorities at Peterborough will be notified of the case.

Memorial Tablet To Late Private Hope Unveiled By Mr. Gillespie

At a memorial service in the Villiers' Sunday school on Sunday night, Mr. G. A. Gillespie unveiled a tablet erected to the memory of Private William Hope, son of the late William Hope of Otonabee, who was killed in action in France. The memorial tablet was contributed by the residents of the school section in which the late Wm. Hope attended school as a boy. These comrades of other days were present in large numbers at the service. Mr. Gillespie himself spent his school days with the late William Hope and had intimately known him in all the later years. The Hope family is old and prominent in the township of Otonabee, and to its honourable past is added the glory that was purchased by the sacrifices of this son who died in the prime of his manhood. Mr. Gillespie referred to the deceased in sympathetic terms, that the occasion and the parting of old ties naturally called up. Rev. Mr. McEachern of Keene, conducted the service.

More Vindication of Chaplain Davidson

Rev. Canon Cornish, St. John's, has received the following letter, which will be read with interest by the many Peterborough friends of Rev. Canon Davidson:

Dear Canon Cornish,—The Bishop told me that you were somewhere east, but I had no idea I was to meet the man whose place you are filling and the Regiment from that town. Canon Davidson is quite splendid and did lots of first-class work with the Battalion. I found it one of the best regiments, spiritually. The last draught left for France to-day. There are a few left as details for working purposes. You can tell all the Church folk who have boys in the Regiment that Major Davidson did all he possibly could for them, and I think they responded very well. Still many of them could and will do better.

This is great life and opportunity. With best wishes.

Yours ever,

Edward W. Hughes.

A Cowardly Act.

One of the most cowardly acts that any man can be guilty of is to hit another behind his back. And when the attack is made on a man who has left his home to serve his country at the front it becomes all the more cowardly. No one who knows the Rev. Canon Davidson, rector of St. John's Church, Peterborough Ont., and chaplain of the 93rd Battalion, needs to be told anything regarding his honesty of purpose and his wholehearted desire to accompany his battalion to the firing line. When he reached England, however, he found, as large numbers of other Canadian chaplains have found, that battalion chaplains either become brigade chaplains or are transferred to some other work, and the latter is what happened in Major Davidson's case. The editor of the Peterborough Daily Review, however, in the issue of September 29th, has stated that a Salvation Army adjutant in that city had been asked to become chaplain of the above battalion, and adds that "when the battalion reached England the Major (i.e., Canon Davidson) had other plans in view which he immediately carried into effect." The latter had, it states, "secured the appointment of chaplain of a training hospital in England" and that his only connection with the battalion was that his name was on the pay roll. The ignorance of the facts of the situation displayed by the writer (said to be a battalion officer), and the imputation of dishonest motives to a man of unblemished character, merit the contempt of every right-thinking person, and we trust that the good people of Peterborough will see that he gets the punishment he deserves.—Canadian Churchman.

Vivid Description of Fighting On the Somme By Peterboro' Boy

Private Jimmy Wilson Who Enlisted With Montreal Regiment Wounded —Had Narrow Escape From Fatality

Mr. Alex. W. Archibald has received the following letter from Private James Wilson of the 73rd Montreal Scottish Battalion, who was recently wounded on the Somme front, the difficulties of which he vividly describes:

Cardiff, Wales, 25, 9, 16.

Dear Alex,—I haven't heard from you for some time now, but I suppose your letters may have gone astray, like others that had been sent to me. Well, lucky Jim has been wounded again, and I am at present lying in the hospital in Wales. I am suffering from concussion and deafness, but am getting on O.K. now. I am still confined to bed but I am to get up for two hours to-day. My hearing is about all right again, but I have still a headache and feel pretty weak as I have been on milk diet for some time.

I was digging a little bit of a trench on the night between 4th and 5th September, when one of Fritz's big shells landed on the parapet and blew it in on me. I was half buried and I thought my ear drums were burst, as the explosion and concussion of these high explosive shells are terrible.

It was lucky for me that I heard it coming and got down low, or I would have been minus a head or something equally as bad, as the trench wasn't deep enough to give me cover when I was standing. We had been stationed around the Ypres salient up till the end of August, when the 1st Canadian Division moved to the Somme.

The Australians made an attack on a stronghold near Thiepval, and we went up to relieve them the next night.

When we got up, there were no trenches at all, so we had to dig ourselves into shell holes. The shelling was terrible, thousands flying day and night, and we lost quite a number of men before we got to the front line. By the time we spread out in shell holes it was just beginning to break day, and we must have been pretty close to the Germans, as they spotted us and opened a rifle fire on us, killing and wounding quite a few more of our platoon.

Well, whenever daylight came we had to be as quiet as mice, as the least little movement would have betrayed our position. We were completely cut off from one another, as it would have been fatal for anyone to look up during the day. We hadn't received rations or water for two days at this time, and our water bottles were all empty long ago, and we had started on our emergency ration—hard dog biscuits.

At night we were drawn back a few yards to line up with the other platoons, and all night we worked trying to dig a little trench, so that we could have cover and communication during the day. The part I was digging was right between two dead Australians who had fallen in the attack two days previous; in fact I had to move one of them to get digging. It seems too bad that we didn't have time to bury the poor fellows, but the shell fire was too heavy and we got orders for every man to get a little cover dug for himself as soon as possible.

It was a dark, wet miserable night and, believe me, Alex., I would rather dig a cellar digin any day. We were soaking wet and all covered with "glaise" from head to foot, our equipment, rifles, gas helmets, all wet and muddy.

My best chum, who was digging next to me, was blown out of his little hole, and we found him about 12 yards away. He was badly shattered and only lived a few minutes. The power of those high-explosive shells is something terrible. You may think me exaggerating things a little bit, Alex., but it is only too true, sad to say.

The next day our stretcher-bearers went out to "no man's land," right in front of us, with a white flag (this is a mutual agreement between us and the Germans at the Somme) and brought in a wounded Australian who had been lying there for three days.

The weather had been wet and cold and it is a wonder to us that he survived it.

He was found lying in a shell-hole, between two chums who had been wounded, too, but died of exposure. We gave him a drink of water in the trench and all that he said was: "I'm happy now that I'm on the stretcher." There are hundreds of dead lying around here unburied.

Well that night we were digging away when we got orders to stand to, as the Germans were coming over. We threw down our shovels and picked up our rifles and placed a few bombs in a convenient place on the parapet and waited there to give them a warm reception. Believe me, Alex., it tries one's nerves to stand there waiting for them to come over every minute. I don't mind admitting that I had to grasp my rifle just a little bit firmer than usual to steady my hand. Well, they didn't come over that night, and perhaps a good thing for us, for we hadn't very many men in the front line, as we had lost heavily the last two days.

The next night I was deepening a other shallow part of the trench, when I got my dose, as I told you.

I was very lucky to get off so easy. During that time in the trenches our Battalion lost something like three men out of every four. Of course the big percentage of them are, fortunately, only wounded.

It is simply wholesale murder at the Somme, Alex., and I hardly dared hope to get out of it alive.

Well, I will now close, trusting this finds you all well, and hoping to hear from you soon. Tell Bill I will be able to bring him that German bullet we used to talk about, if I am spared to come back. The German bullets are lying about in thousands.

His Exercise.

Once more Peterborough has been heavily hit by the ravages of war. This morning news was received of the death of three of Peterborough's soldier heroes, Lieut. Arthur Ackerman, of the 19th Battalion, formerly of the 2nd, Lance Cerporal Harold Losey, who went overseas with the 39th Battalion, and Gunner Stanley Smith, who enlisted here in the 33rd Battery. Two of these, Lieut. Ackerman and Gunner Smith, had already been reported wounded, and now the sad announcement is made that they have died of their injuries. Two other Peterborough soldiers are wounded, one a well known athlete, Gunner Ormond Cavanah, and the other, the first member of the 93rd Battalion to be hit, Gunner Louis Fildes, who had transferred to the Artillery.

LIEUT. ARTHUR ACKERMAN.

Lieut. Arthur Ackerman has given his life for the principles which led him to enlist with the First Canadian Contingent. A cablegram to his parents; Mr. and Mrs. B. F. Ackerman, this morning, from Miss Glassford, of London, England, who has befriended many Peterborough boys, conveyed the sad news that Lieut. Ackerman died from the effects of his wounds last evening. At his bedside when he passed away were his brother-in-law, Major S. T. Medd, of the 8th C.M.R., and his old old commanding officer in the 57th Regiment, Major (Dr.) A. W. McPherson, of the Canadian Army Medical Corps. The news will be received everywhere with genuine regret. Lieut. Ackerman was a Peterborough boy in every sense of the word, as he was born in this city twenty-three years ago. He was educated in the local public schools and Collegiate Institute. Before the war Lieut. Ackerman had been a sergeant in the 57th Regiment, and when the first call for men came he was not found wanting. He enlisted as a private, and was a corporal when the 2nd Battalion went overseas. Soon after reaching France he was made sergeant for good work, and went through the battles of Ypres, Festubert and Givenchy without a scratch, although he had many narrow escapes. Last winter he was given a commission as Lieutenant, and soon after won the Military Cross for conspicuous gallantry, a much coveted decoration, and one that in his case was much merited.

Lieut. Ackerman was wounded by shrapnel on September 23 in the fighting on the Somme. His injury was in the abdomen, and was regarded as very serious from the first, an operation being necessary at once.

Lieut. Ackerman is survived by his parents, two brothers, Major Chas. Ackerman, invalided home from the front, and Capt. W. C. Ackerman, of the 10th Artillery Brigade, and two sisters, Mrs. (Major) S. T. Medd and Mrs. R. M. Waddell of Peterborough.

Another gallant young Peterborough officer has made the supreme sacrifice for the Empire. This morning Mr. A. St. A. Smith, manager of the Bank of Toronto, Keene, received a telegram from Ottawa that his son, Lieut. Harold P. Smith, Canadian Field Artillery, is officially reported died of wounds. The news will be received with deep regret in Peterborough. Lieut. Smith was born in this city and spent most of his life here, living with his grandmother, the late Mrs. Dennie George street north. His genial qualities had endeared him to all with whom he came in contact. Lieut. Smith was educated in the local schools, at St Alban's, Brockville, and at Royal Military College, Kingston. He and the late Lieut. Morris were close friends. They entered R. M.C. together, graduated together last year, received commissions in the same artillery brigade, left Peterborough together, and went to the front together. Now they have died within a couple of weeks of each other. Lieut. Smith went to the front with a western artillery brigade. Another brother, Lieut. Harry Smith, is at the front with the Canadian Engineers.

LANCE-CORP. HAROLD LOSEY.

Only yesterday the Examiner published a letter from Lance-Corp. Harold Losey, in which he described some of the recent fighting, and referred to his promition. "I have been through the greatest advance the Canadians ever made, and I know there was a Guiding Hand helping me through the battle," he wrote to his mother on Sept. 20th. To-day, from Ottawa, comes the official message that Lance-Corp. Losey died of wounds in the 2nd Battalion 1st Midlands Clearing Station on Sept. 29th.

Lance-Corp. Losey is a son of Pte. Joseph Losey, who is now overseas with the 93rd Battalion, and his mother resides at 872 Water Street. He enlisted here in the spring of 1915 with the 39th Battalion, and went overseas with that unit, and was afterwards transferred to another Canadian battalion. He was born in Canada, and had lived in Peterborough for some time. Lance-Corp. Losey was a close friend of Pte. Harold Henry, of Peterborough, killed a short time ago. He was a splendid youngster, and in his last letter he speaks of having sent $100 home to his mother. A sister, Florence, died suddenly in August last.

GUNNER STANLEY SMITH.

On Tuesday Gunner Sidney Smith, son of Mr. W. H. Smith, 189 Hunter Street, East, was officially reported wounded on Oct. 8th, and admitted to hospital, suffering from a gunshot wound in the abdomen. To-day this message is followed by a more tragic telegram from Ottawa, stating that Gunner Smith died from his wounds in No. 2 General Hospital, Rouen, on Oct. 10th, two days after he was wounded. Gunner Smith, who was a Canadian born member of the Canadian Artillery, enlisted here in the summer of 1915 with the 33rd Battery, and went overseas with that unit as a signaller, afterwards going to France with a draft for another battery.

Before enlisting he was employed in the Auburn Woollen Mills. Gunner Smith had many friends, and the relatives of the East City boy will have the sympathy of the city generally.

GUNNER H. S. PAUL.

Mrs. Margaret Paul, 137 Hunter street east, has received word to the effect that her son, Gunner Harold Stanley Paul has been wounded in the left arm. Gunner Paul enlisted in Montreal with the 107th Siege Battery

PTE. JOHN GOUGH.

Pte. John Gough who enlisted in Peterborough a year ago last August and went overseas as a member of the 50th Battalion, has been wounded in the recent fighting. He has not yet been officially reported, but gives the information himself in a letter, in which he states that he was wounded in the right arm above the elbow on Sept 16th, and is now in hospital at Epsom Eng. Pte. Gough says that several other wounded Peterborough soldiers are in the same hospital. Pte. Gough boarded at the home of Mrs. Ward, 814 Water street.

PTE. FRANK MARSHAL.

Mr. James Leahy of Douro, received word from Ottawa this morning that No. 104404 Pte. Frank X Marshal Canadian Infantry is officially reported admitted to No. 12 General Hospital, Rouen, on Oct. 7th, with gun shot wounds in the side and hand.

GUNNER ORMAND CAVANAH.

One of the many gallant Peterborough athletes who are playing the bigger game at the front, Gunner Ormand Cavanah, son of Mrs. Sara Cavanah, 189 London Street, has been wounded. An official message received by his mother this morning states that he was wounded on Oct. 2. No further particulars have been received. By reason of his proficiency in sport, Gunner Cavanah is one of the best known Peterborough boys overseas. As a hockey player he was one of the stars of the Peterborough Junior O. H. A. team, and in baseball he was one of the Thistle aggregation which gave the East City team such a battle last year for the City League honours. He is also a clever basketball and Rugby player—in fact shone in all lines of sport. Gunner Cavanah enlisted with many other City League stars in the 33rd Battery, and went overseas as a sergeant. He threw up his stripes to go to the front with the first draft from the 33rd to join a Guelph battery. He has been at the front for some eight months.

LANCE CORP. BRUCE BLANCHARD, Peterborough boy, who has been awarded the Military Medal for bravery. At St. Eloi last spring, although badly wounded, he continued to hurl grenades at the Germans until his supply was exhausted. He is a son of Capt. W. H. Blanchard, the local veterinary surgeon, who is also on active service.

GUNNER LOUIS FILDES.

The first casualty in the ranks of the 93rd Battalion is recorded to-day. Gunner Louis Fildes, of the Canadian Artillery, is officially reported wounded. Gunner Fildes went overseas with the 93rd Battalion as a member of No. 1 Platoon, A Company, and was transferred to the Canadian Heavy Artillery, going to France with a draft. To-day he is officially reported wounded. Gunner Fildes was one of the finest looking soldiers who left with the Peterborough battalion. Local citizens who used to watch the march-outs of the 93rd will remember him as one of the two stalwart soldiers who used to march alongside Col. Johnston as a body guard. He had ten years' service with the Grenadier Guards, and had both the Queen's and King's medals for service in the South African war. He always was a conspicuous figure by reason of his 74 inches of statute and soldierly bearing, and was a prime favourite with officers and men alike. Pte. Fildes had been employed on a farm near Peterborough before enlisting.

Pte. Jas. Tierney.

Mrs. Katharine Tierney, 507 Rubidge street, received a message from Ottawa last night to the effect that her husband, Pte. Jas. Tierney, Canadian Infantry, is officially reported admitted to No. 10 General Hospital, Rouen, on Oct. 1st, wounded in the right foot. Pte Tierney enlisted here last spring, just before the departure of the 59th Battalion, when that unit made a final appeal here for recruits. In the spring of 1915 he was a member of the local detachment of the 39th, but was discharged from that battalion. He was determined to get overseas, however, and got his change last spring. He went over with the 59th, but was transferred to another Canadian battalion.

Pte. Scriver Shell-shocked.

Miss Grace Scriver, Nicholls Hospital, received an official message this afternoon to the effect that her brother, Pte. Hugh Scriver, Medical Services, is reported admitted to No. 12 General Hospital, Rouen, on Oct. 4th, with disorderly action of heart, caused by shell shock. He is one of five Norwood brothers overseas, and the second to appear on the casualty list within a few days.

Gunner Stanley Smith, the Peterborough artilleryman, who was yesterday reported to have died of wounds, is survived by a wife and child residing on Park street. Gunner Smith is a third generation Canadian, and was born in Peterborough. His grandfather, Charles Webb, was one of Wellington's army at Waterloo and came through safely, afterwards emigrating to Canada.

Sergeant Warden Brown, who is officially reported wounded to-day, is a son of Mr. Andrew Brown, 319 Park street, the local real estate agent, and is well known throughout the city. No particulars have been received. Sergeant Brown enlisted in Lindsay with the 59th Battalion and went overseas with Lt.-Col. Dawson's unit in the spring of this year. He was afterwards transferred to another Eastern Ontario battalion at the front.

PTE. HUGH SCRIVER, Norwood boy, who is officially reported admitted to No. 12 General Hospital, Rouen, suffering from shell shock. His sister is at the Nicholls Hospital.

HUNS ARE GLAD TO SURRENDER SAYS PETERBORO' BOY

Signaller E. J. Downey of 4th Battery Gives Some Interesting News of Recent Events on Somme Front—Prisoners Going By Every Day

CAUGHT BY OWN GAS

Signaller E. J. Downey, of Peterborough, who left here with the first body of troops to depart from Peterborough for the front, the first draft from the 24th Field Battery, and who has been in France with the 4th Battery, 1st Canadian Artillery Brigade, gives some interesting details of the recent fighting on the Somme in a letter just received by his parents. Signaller Downey's wife resides at 158 Edinburgh street.

Signaller Downey says: Just a few lines to let you know that I am well, hoping this will find you all enjoying the best of health. I cannot say that I am enjoying the weather here. I think we are in for another wet and muddy winter, and believe me we have lots of mud. I saw Charlie Malone in an ambulance one day when I was coming down from the guns after taking up ammunition. I think he had two fingers taken off. I saw Cyril Lehane about a month ago, but have not seen him lately. He is in the second battalion. They made a charge here and I don't know how many men they lost, but I hear they only had a few casualties. I hope he is safe, but we can only hope for the best.

We have advanced here for quite a distance and I have just returned from a working party which was up at the new position. We had to move our guns a mile and a half forward and take it from me it was some place. It was up at the Huns' front line—that is it was his at one time, but as we wanted it of course he had to get out, and he left quite a few behind that couldn't get out. We had to bury about twenty. We had two men doing nothing but picking up bodies or what were once men. In some cases there were only a few pieces. It must have been hell while it lasted.

I guess Fritz is getting about fed up with the war. One would think so the way the prisoners are coming down. They are going by every day and glad to be taken. I was talking to one of them. He could speak very good English. He told me that they put some gas over, but that it blew back over their own lines, and he saved himself by digging a small hole and putting his face in it. His clothes were yellow from the fumes and he was in pretty hard shape. He could not keep up with the rest of the prisoners, but had to rest every little while to get his breath. He said he was glad to get out of it and that his father and mother would be happy when they heard he had been taken prisoner.

DON'T "JOCKEY" ON HIGHWAYS

Drivers of vehicles, (traction or motor or driven by horse) who indulge in the practice of "jockeying" or monopolising the highway are asked to peruse the appended section of the Highways Laws of the Province and to govern themselves accordingly. PATRIOTIC ADDRESSES AT ROSENEATH BY R. R. HALL AND MR. DANIEL O'CONNELL

Recommendation to Hamilton Township Council to Put Half Mill on Tax Rate For British Red Cross Contribution---Two Splendid Addresses.

A public meeting of Hamilton township ratepayers, at Roseneath, last night, passed a resolution requesting their municipal council to levy one-half a mill on the dollar of their assessment to provide a contribution to the British Red Cross fund. Reeve Chas. Gregg presided, and stated that it had been proposed to raise a sum by public subscription, but after listening to two stirringly patriotic appeals delivered by Mr. R. R. Hall and Mr. Daniel O'Connell upon the work of the British Red Cross, and the critical military situation that has and yet turned in to a definite program of victory, Mr. John Murphy moved, seconded by Mr. W. R. Cogle, that the Council be asked to add one-half a mill to the rate as the Township's offering to the Red Cross this year.

Roseneath has an enviable reputation for enthusiasm toward patriotic movements, for generosity in patriotic giving, and for a whole-hearted support to the country since the war commenced, and while last night's meeting was not attended as largely as others that have been held in the town hall for patriotic purposes, the spirit of the assembled farmers from once more to the call of the British Red Cross, asking their Council to provide for a gift of $220.00.

Reeve Gregg said he regretted that the half mill was not provided, as he was a year ago when the last appeal for this fund was made, but he might have consoled himself with the knowledge that the decreased attendance reflected something of the assurance common to the entire country that the war is all but won, and of the apathy and apparent unconcern that has developed from that general opinion.

Hence the months of silence, official and otherwise, demanded of the Peterborough speakers their best efforts, and both responded with splendidly effective addresses. While particularly dealing with the present needs of the Red Cross, illustrated by the recent heavy casualties among the Canadian forces, both Mr. Hall and Mr. O'Connell covered the general progress of the war, emphasizing the need of greater sacrifices, and especially of greater loans from the entire Canadian people.

Illusion of Security.

One would imagine from the public thought and action, Mr. Hall began, that the war was nearly over. The Canadian people were enjoying themselves as in the olden times of peace, but the war will have to make sacrifices that may be startling. Forty-nine millions of people have come under the German heel since the war began—Belgium, Russian Poland, Serbia, Montenegro and northern France. We have nothing to congratulate ourselves for so far as material results are concerned when we realize that seven Dominions of Canada, considering the point of population, have been overrun by the Central Powers.

Our sacrifices, Mr. Hall believed, had only begun. During a recent week the Canadian casualties had averaged one thousand a day. Our wounded are carefully attended and nursed back to health by the work of the Red Cross? Mr. Hall stated person more cowardly, more despicable than that Canadian who refuses to contribute a trifle of his money that our wounded may be properly cared for through the ministration of the Red Cross? Mr. Hall stated that the work instituted by Florence Nightingale had reduced the mortality of the wounded in battle from 42 per cent. to four per cent.

A Fool's Paradise.

Turning to the recruiting question, Mr. Hall observed that in comparison with a year ago the silence is almost audible. The country is prosperous, employment is easy, and because the fallen bullet is does not meet the wastage. We are living in a fool's paradise. You didn't find the people of Great Britain thinking the war is over, you find them stirred to realness to make the greatest sacrifices. They realize what a German triumph would mean. And that sentiment must be felt here. What is the use of sending men to the front if we do not send reinforcements, and if we will not send those supports we might as well throw down our arms, and admit our unworthiness of freedom, as did ancient Babylon and Greece. The Irish republic have been confronted by challenges before. The armada of Phillip of Spain and the menace of Napoleon's armies were decisively answered and our freedom maintained and handed down to us.

Mr. O'Connell.

Mr. O'Connell clearly presented the idea that we had felt that it was only a matter of time until victory would be assured, when our last forces and those of our allies were brought to bear upon the Central Powers. And now it would be admitted that we have been fighting with our backs to the wall, seven fighting against seven, of trained enemies with comparatively small material gains as evidence of our gains.

Mr. O'Connell dwelt upon the ruin and devastation that had been visited upon the belligerent countries—all but Canada, and this freedom from the horrors of war made it difficult to bring to the minds of the people a realization of their danger. ...at, too, explained why the responses that should be given to calls for men and money were not as they should be.

Every man in Canada who gives the situation the consideration it deserves, who realizes the danger confronting us, must do one of two things. If he of military age, of good conscience, possessing the true patriotic spirit, who does not intend to offend against the national, the civil and the moral law, who has any self-respect, self-respect, who is worthy of the esteem of society and his fellow men. It is his bounden duty to enlist now. Mr. O'Connell paid a tribute to the voluntary enlistments in England, and remarked that every man of military age is absolutely necessary in the forces if the war is to be brought to the successful conclusion we desire. Unless every ounce of our strength is put into the struggle, unless every man and woman does his and her part we cannot possibly win victory. It was evident that this patriotic spirit must animate all Canadians if they are to do their share.

When appeals come for patriotic work, you must make the sacrifice, you must respond as true and patriotic citizens, realizing the fact that your sacrifice is for the maintenance and protection of all that we as a people cherish and enjoy.

Rev. Mr. Washington made a brief address, and votes of thanks were extended to the visiting speakers and to Reeve Gregg.

Cattle Stealing Alleged Against Dummer Family

The Hills of Dummer are once more on the...toils. Davis Hill and Mrs. Clarence Sampson, son and daughter, respectively, of Robert Hill, of Dummer, were held at the police station this afternoon on a charge of cattle stealing. Clarence Sampson is wanted on a similar charge.

Warden Darling of Dummer lost three cattle valued at $150, on October 2nd; Stuart Clysdale has five cattle missing; William Davis, one cow, and Richard Ferguson, one cow, also on the missing list.

There are but a few and of the latest sudden departure of farm stock that turned from cattle to divers other. During the past year, seven years there have been mysterious disappearances in and around Dummer Township, farmers reporting the loss of cattle, sheep, turkeys, ducks of chickens, forms of beef, etc. It is stated that these were never investigated deeply, for the reason that the owners feared a burned barn and that sort of vengeance and intimidation.

County Constable Archie Moore has been working on the case for some time and yesterday afternoon visited the Hill settlement, accompanied by Constable Joe Bullied and Constable Clemming of Warsaw.

They were informed that Davis Hill and his father had gone to Norwood, but indirectly learned that they were on their way to a sale, nearby. Constables Moore's party landed Davis Hill, but there were no signs of Clarence or Sampson. They upraid Mrs. Sampson into Peterborough and returned at 9 o'clock this morning to Sampson ... but their pet was ...ssing.

It is believed that William Hill is with Sampson, although the former is not particularly wanted by the police.

Some of the cattle alleged to have been stolen lately was sold to a grocer, named McKee, near Campbellford after being driven down the sideroads during the night.

ALD. EDGAR WANTS TARIFF REMOVED

Suggests This as a Means of Reducing the High Cost of Living

At last night's meeting of the City Council it was moved by Ald. Stratton and seconded by Ald. Duncan, that this city join with Toronto, Ottawa, and other municipalities in asking the Dominion Government to investigate the increased cost of the necessaries of life.

On motion of Ald. Edgar and Ald. Wait, the City Council will ask the Dominion Government to remove the Customs duty from foodstuffs that are of high cost in Canada and to prohibit the exportation to countries other than Great Britain and her Allies of raw material for products which are scarce in this country.

The city will probably be represented at a meeting to be held in Ottawa on Friday next, when representations will be made to the Government.

MAJOR GORDON SOUTHAM FAMOUS RUGBY STAR KILLED IN ACTION

HAMILTON, Ont., Oct. 16.—Word was received here to-day that Major Gordon H. Southam, commander of the Hamilton Sportsmen's Battery, son of William Southam, president of the Spectator Printing Co., has been killed in action. Major Southam was one of Canada's famous football stars, and prominent in many other lines of sport. He was a brother of Richard Southam of Toronto.

Major Southam was born in Hamilton in 1886. Entering Toronto University from Upper Canada College in 1909 he graduated with the degree of B. A. in 1907. His record there is that he was not only the best all-round athlete in the University, but was also a good student, and personally a most modest and unassuming man. He played for three years on Varsity's fast rugby and hockey teams; held the Varsity novice championship in tennis; played on the Canadian international cricket team and on the Ontario interprovincial golf team; and in 1907 was champion of Lambton Golf Club. He was a member of Toronto University Club and of the Zeta Psi Society. Shortly after graduation he entered the field of journalism, and returned to Hamilton to become connected with the Spectator newspaper. His widow, his father, and one brother still live there. In the spring of 1915 he went to Kingston to qualify as an artillery officer. In Kingston he got his commission, and shortly afterwards he went overseas with the 42th Battery. When killed he had been in France only a few months. He was still in the prime of life—only 30 years of age.

In One Sense.

"Then every nonagenarian must live a double life."

Presentation To Miss D. T. Mann

People of Apsley Turn Out to Welcome Miss Mann Who Has Returned From the Front

APSLEY, Oct. 15.—Miss D. T. Mann, daughter of Mrs. Esau Tucker of this place, who has been a nurse in France and England, being in delicate health, arrived home on furlough. A car decked in military splendour was sent from here to meet her at Peterborough. Soon after her arrival the people of the Village and surrounding country held a reception in her honour. She was escorted to the hall by her nearest relatives and the ushers had prepared for her a chair on the platform draped with Union Jacks. The hall was beautifully decorated with Maple leaves, pennants and the flags of the Allies.

When all were assembled the following programme was rendered with Mrs. (Rev.) E. W. Gardner presiding organist for the patriotic choruses:

Hymn, "All Hail."
Prayer, Rev. S. Carr.

Address of welcome, read by Mrs. Wm. Staples:

Apsley, Sept. 29th, 1918.

Dear Miss Mann.—We are assembled here this evening to welcome you home after sixteen months of separation, during which time you have made a noble sacrifice for us and for our Empire. We have every reason to be thankful that it has been God's wish for you to return to us again.

You left your own dear relatives here and crossed the broad ocean amid torpedoes and submarines, and by the merest chance landed safely in England.

While there you sacrificed your health while attending to the needs of our brave soldiers who were wounded and suffering from various diseases. Not thinking you were doing enough in England to serve your country you still went farther into danger when you landed in France, where the noise of cannon and horrors of warfare were ever prevalent. The task in which you were engaged was a hard one, but you had right and the most sacred cause on your side to nerve you to high endeavour.

We cannot express in mere words how proud we are of you to-night and how much gratitude and love we owe to you, but we know that now when our own brave Apsley boys are about to enter the trenches that those boys whom you have assisted are as dear to their relatives as ours are to us.

During the past year what you have done for humanity has won for you honour and distinction, which will go with you through life and rest assured that a higher reward will be awaiting you in that brighter land where warfare is unknown.

Signed on behalf of the citizens of Harvey and Anstruther.

Mrs. Richard. Halpa.
Mrs. Wellington Lean.

The above address was beautifully written and decorated with hand-paintings of maple leaves in autumn tints and the flags of Great Britain, Canada and France.

Chorus, "We'll Never Let the Old Flag Fall."
Address, Rev. E. W. Gardner.
Solo, Miss Grace Carr.
Chorus, "It's a Long Way to Tipperary."
Recitation, "Somebody's Son," Mrs. Wm. Staples.

Somebody's sons are called to the fight,
Will it be your's or mine?
Somebody's sons must fight for the right;
Shall it be mine or thine?
Somebody's sons, on their lips a song
Will march to the front so gay;
Somebody's sons, in the passing throng,
How many return, how many stay?

Somebody's lover is coping home,
Will it be your's or mine?
He saved the flag and honour won,
Will it be mine or thine?
Eagerly, tenderly, we will welcome them,
And kiss from their tired eyes,
The memories of all the dying men,
The horrors that in them lies.

Somebody's son was called to the Cross;
It was not your's or mine,
But Mary pray, in the hour of her loss,

ENGLAND HAS QUEER WAYS OF SAYING THINGS

Some Peculiarities of Pronunciation of Names in the Old Country

Andrew Lang once said that should a cultured Englishman want to realize how ignorant he really was, he should attempt to pronounce a selected list of, say a hundred English proper names. Lang was of the opinion that should the Englishman succeed in pronouncing correctly a score of such names he was "entitled to pat himself on the back."

There are, of course, certain eccentric pronunciations of well-known English names that present no difficulty to either Englishmen or well posted Americans, such as, for instance, Grosvenor, Beauchamp, Cholmondeley and Farquarson. Reuter too, comes readily to the lips, and so do such names as Le Queux and Marjoribanks, but once away from this select and familiar circle, even Englishmen find themselves on treacherous ground. It is not by any means every man who knows that Levenson Gower is properly pronounced Lesson-Gore; that a famous general is called by his friends Bay-den Pole that another popular soldier is rightly addressed as Pool Carey, or that Lord Knollys, the King's private secretary, is known as Nolls.

Who, without special enlightenment, would pronounce Daisell, Decell, Clavehouse, Clayverse, or Offsaan, Gileen, although he would certainly convict himself, in British eyes of ignorance if he failed to do so? Few of the thousands of that popular actor, pronounced Bowcher. Who would pronounce Abergavenny as Abergenny, Anstruther as Anster, or Beaulieu as Bewly?

Why, it may reasonably be asked should Home be changed to Hume and Hotham into Hutham, and why should Jervis become Jarvis, while Jervois is Jervis? Knighley is pronounced Keely by all except the good people who live in that Yorkshire town, and they call it Keethly, while Keighley, to those who know, Keetly. Poultenel loses the "u" and becomes Pole-tney; Magerarmorne drops three letters being abbreviated to Maramorne, while Rutheven, for some equally obscure reason, is metamorphosed into Rivven. Sir Claude de Crespigny answers to the name Crespiny; Lord Bury is addressed as Berry, but Bury, the famous family name of another earldom—Charleville now extinct—is pronounced Bewry.

Carew is Cairie or Caroo, just as you please; Cassilis is Cassels, but Cheyne is Chayney. Urquhart is shortened in Urkurt. Vaux becomes Vox the hunter of big game is not Mr Selous, but Mr. Seloo; Lord Vellet ort is Valleytort, and Lord Jersey's family name is Villers. Sarymgeour, that good old Scottish name, comes as Scrimjer from British lips, and Tyrwhitt is given at Tir-rit to rhyme with spirit. Menzies is not what it seems in print—it is Minges, or Meenyes; Meux degenerates into Mewes while Lord Wemyss would not know he was addressed unless you pronounced his title Weems. Likewise Mr Wriothesley must be called Riothsly and Mr. Yerburgh answers to the name of Yarborough.

Ouless and Oulless (the correct pronunciation are near enough to pass unquestioned; but why should Penny-father in print become Pennyfeather [illegible] transformed Mainwaring and Rother to Mark-is [illegible] suggestively pronounced by the word "bother" [illegible] pronounced [illegible] Geoghan, and ancient and honourable Irish name, as Gay-gun, or Gregun, and St. Leger as Sillinger, Lord Coke is addressed as Cook, Mr. Featherstonaugh as Festumhaw, and Lord Ingestre as Ingestry.

Also, it must be added, the knowing Englishman must never fail to pronounce Foljambe as Fool-jum, Vouless as Vuah, Dilwyn as Diffoh, Belvoir as Beever and Bertie as Barty.

From all of which it will be observed that our British cousins evince curious and contradictory ideas with reference to proper names. Officially they exhibit all their national conservatism, touching the retention of names in some circumstances; individually they indulge in all manner of license in the bestowal of names upon their offspring.—Philadelphia Ledger.

TOO MANY "GODMOTHERS."

Some French Soldiers in Switzerland Have Five, and Others None.

PARIS, Oct. 15.—"War godmothers" appear, like many other blessings, to be open to criticism. Some poilus, it appears, are over-blessed in this respect and others, just as deserving, escape the blessings altogether. This is at least the state of affairs alleged in a petition signed by French interned soldiers in a certain Swiss resort. The petition requests that henceforth the interned soldiers be no longer authorized to have "war godmothers."

The petition, on the face of it, seems surprising, as everyone has heard how "godmothers" supply prisoners and men at the front with clothing and parcels of every kind, write to them and encourage them who suffer from the blues.

An inquiry instituted in Switzerland by the medical authorities, revealed the fact that 90 per cent. of those interned who are actually undergoing disciplinary confinement for unruly behaviour, have on an average four to five "godmothers" each, one having been as many as twelve! On the other hand, only 10 per cent. of those in the hotels have been "adopted."

It also appears that many "godmothers" shower money presents somewhat too freely on their "godsons," with the result that some of those thus favoured go in for wining and dining on too liberal a scale and get themselves into trouble.

H. B. Cowan's Address On Rural Problems At Convention of Federated Liberal Clubs

Advocates Removal of Tariff From Articles the Farmer Buys and Taxation of Rural and Urban Land Values—Says United Farmers Are a Growing Power—Tariff Unjust to Farmer

At the recent London convention of Liberal Clubs of Ontario, Mr. H. B. Cowan, editor-in-chief of Farm and Dairy, discussed the subject of "Agriculture as Seen by the Farmers."

In his introduction he referred to the growing shortage of farm products and the resultant high cost of living. This diminishing production could not be easily made good, nor soon. Farming should be profitable. It is recognized as the basic industry on which the prosperity of all other industries depends. Experimental farms, agricultural farms, associations of dairymen, cattle-breeders, and other specialties of farming have been organized and last year Canada spent $2,000,000 to promote agriculture. Banks, railways and industrial concerns have expended immense sums for the same purpose. All these agencies have been productive of good but in spite of them agriculture has not been made as productive as it should be.

Mr. Cowan enumerated the signs of this failure. Rural districts have been steadily depopulated. If money was being made freely on the farms of Ontario, people would be rushing into agriculture and not out of it. Tenant farmers are increasing.

The Wrong in Existing Methods.

Mr. Cowan then discussed the wrongs in the methods that have been followed in the past to improve agricultural conditions.

At the very time we vote millions of dollars to aid agriculture we are apt to pass laws that enable other classes in the community to heap on the farmer vastly greater burdens than we remove. What we give with one hand we take away with the other. There are two ways in particular in which this is done.

In the first place our tariff laws are absolutely unjust to the farmer. They take from the farmer, through the combines and trusts which they foster, and hand over to the manufacturing industries probably $80.00 to every $1.00 we give the farmer in the form of legislative grants. Only recently a well-informed writer in the Farmer's Advocate estimated that the tax which the protected interests are able to colect from the public amounts to $370,000,000.00 annually. This with the customs duties added, he estimated to equal a tax of $300.00 a year on every rural family in Canada. His estimates have not been seriously questioned. If this is even only approximately correct need we wonder that farming is not prospering as it should or that scores of thousands of our farmers are leaving their farms in despair?

Effect of Increased Land Values.

A second mistake we have made has been that we have not understood the effect of increasing land values in our rural communities as well as in our urban centres. Every time we succeed in doing something to increase the prosperity of the farmer, land values in country and cities, but particularly the cities, leap up by millions of dollars and thus through increased rents and the greater cost of commodities deprive the farmers of the very benefit it was intended he should gain. These increasing land values, which we have been accustomed to hail as a sign of increased rural and national prosperity have in fact been a principal cause of rural decay. At this point, if we desire to progress as they are, we must turn the customary method of looking at things completely inside out.

[illegible] land values, if [illegible]

Encourage Farmers to Sell.

Right here is where we have made one of our greatest mistakes. Every time we strive to benefit agriculture by organizing co-operative societies or by building better roads, introducing farm telephones, free rural mail relivered, Hydro-Electric power and radial railways, we increase land values and just as fast as we increase land values we encourage farmers to sell out and retire and speculators to invest. We also increase the percentage of our tenant farmers and make it more difficult for immigrants and farmers' sons to buy and own their own farms. Thus what we expect to prove benefits often prove handicaps in disguise. This is because the speculative value tends to outrun the real value.

In that much lauded country of Denmark farm land values have reached such a height that the labour income of the average farmer is lower than it is in Canada, where we still have free lands in remote districts which tend to keep down land values. Increased prosperity in the country as already intimated, tends to increase city land values and thus an additional heavy burden is placed on the farmer in many devious ways.

Bear in mind that I am heartily in favour of the introduction of every one of the methods of helping agriculture that I have here enumerated and of many more. What we must do is to see that they are introduced on a different basis than they have been hitherto, so as to avoid the effects I have mentioned.

A Change in Policy Needed.

If then these are the facts what are we going to do about them? In the first place our political parties should recognize them as facts and act accordingly. As yet they have not done so. Both political parties are still shouting for more experimental farms, cheaper money for farmers, and other similar innovations the ultimate effect of which, under existing conditions will be to aggravate not benefit the situation. The political party which first recognizes these conditions and acts accordingly will confer untold benefit upon our country.

The Remedies.

What then is the remedy for these conditions? The farmers themselves believe that they have found it. Through their now increasingly powerful organizations they are making their platform known.

In the first place they say we must make farming more profitable, not by handing out money grants and appointing more government officials, but by removing the burdens under which agriculture is now labouring.

A long step in this direction will be taken when we remove the tariff burden off the main articles at least which the farmer buys. In this way $150.00 to $300.00 a year could be added to the labour returns of every farmer's family in Canada. The farmers themselves, are in favour of ultimate free trade between Canada and the Mother Land.

A second step which the farmers urge is the taxation of land value, both urban and rural, not only as a means of raising municipal revenue, but for provincial and dominion purposes as well. Such action would have an immediate beneficial effect. It would squeeze out the speculative value and reduce existing values to real values. It would bring onto the market hundreds of thousands of acres of farm lands in Ontario now either not worked at all or only partland values on a basis that would make land values on a basi that would make it easier for farmers' sons, immigrants and even city residents to purchase farm land to advantage and work it at a profit. It would promote closer settlement and thus naturally facilitate the building of better country roads, schools and the hundred and one other advantages of which country districts are in need. It would bring back to our rural sections through the money that would thus be raised some part at least of the scores of millions of dollars which are piling up every few years in the form of increased city land values and which now flow for the most part into the pockets of a comparatively few wealthy city land owners.

I cannot take time to explain in detail how all these improvements would be affected by two such simple reforms. All I can say is that our farmers have studied out this matter carefully for themselves and are satisfied that they are right. In Western Canada they stand 90,000 strong on this simple platform and within a few years we may expect to see many thousands of our Ontario farmers standing solidly with them. We are pleased to see a gathering such as this which has met to consider problems of this character. We would be still more pleased to see you take a forward step along the lines I have indicated.

A Chance To Go Over With a Cavalry Unit

Peterborough young men who have been wishing to get to the front with a cavalry unit, have a chance now. Canada's crack cavalry corps, the Canadian Mounted Rifles, are seeking recruits here for the training depot at Hamilton, which has already sent 900 recruits overseas since last spring. Drafts are being sent over periodically, and when they reach England go to the three Canadian cavalry regiments, the Strathcona Horse, Fort Garry Horse, and the Royal Canadian Dragoons, now in training for the day that is believed near at hand, when cavalry will come into their own in the fighting on the western front. Canadian cavalry patrols have already been used on the Somme in the recent fighting. Corporal W. Weatherston, of the C.M.R. is in the city, and any information can be obtained from him at the recruiting station, Simcoe street. The recruits for the C.M.R. will be trained at Hamilton, where they are comfortably housed in a commodious barracks built by the city. Good treatment and a quick passage overseas is the motto of the C.M.R.

The Fall Weather Hard On Little Ones

Canadian fall weather is extremely hard on little ones. One day it is warm and bright and the next wet and cold. These sudden changes bring on colds, cramps and colic, and unless baby's little stomach is kept right the result may be serious. There is nothing to equal Baby's Own Tablets in keeping the little ones well. They sweeten the stomach, regulate the bowels, break up colds and make baby thrive. The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

St. Vitus' Dance Can Be Easily Cured

A Tonic For the Blood and Nerves With Rest All That Is Needed

Many a child has been called awkward, has been punished in school for not keeping still or for dropping things, when the trouble was really St. Vitus dance. This trouble may appear at any age but is most often met between the ages of six and fourteen. The most frequent cause of the disease is poor blood, aggravated by indoor confinement or mental strain at school. Under these conditions the blood fails to carry nourishment to the nerves and the child begins to show listlessness and inattention. Then it becomes restless and twitching of the muscles and jerking of the limbs and body follow. A remedy that cures St. Vitus dance and cures it so thoroughly that no trace of the disease remains is Dr. Williams Pink Pills which renew the blood, thus feeding and strengthening the starved nerves. This is the only way to cure the trouble, and parents should lose no time in giving this treatment if their child seems nervous or irritable. Mrs. Wm. A. Squires, Cannington, Ont., says "My only daughter, now fourteen years of age, was troubled for several years with St. Vitus dance. She was so bad that at times she would lose control of her limbs and her face and eyes would be contorted. We had medical advice and medicine, but it did not help her. In fact we thought the trouble growing worse, and finally we had to take her from school. About a year ago we began giving her Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and by the time she had taken five boxes she was completely cured, and is now a fine healthy girl. I firmly believe we owe this to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and are very grateful for her restoration to perfect health."

You can get these pills from any dealer in medicine or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Irish Question Comes Up To-day

Conciliatory Proposal Will Be Prepared For Presentation to the Irish Leaders—Men Needed to Fill Up the Irish Battalions

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

LONDON, Oct. 19.—The Cabinet was to meet to-day to discuss the Irish question, but it was considered certain in view of Lloyd George's statement in the Commons, yesterday, that no attempt would be made to impose conscription in Ireland. The Daily News said it was possible the Cabinet would frame some conciliatory proposal for presentation to the Irish leaders. John Redmond, in the House of Commons said recruiting in Ireland was harmed because Sir Edward Carson was in the coalition cabinet.

GREEKS VISIT LEGATION AND ASK FOR AMERICAN PROTECTION FROM FOREIGNERS IN ATHENS

Procession of Four Thousand Who Resent the Action of the Allies March to the Legation of the United States With the American and Greek Flags at Their Head and Protest Against the Landing of Marines

THE SITUATION APPEARS TO BE DANGEROUS CROWDS CHEERING FOR KING CONSTANTINE

ATHENS, OCT. 19—The Greek King is Willing to Give a Pledge and Restrain All Demonstrations in the Streets.

LONDON, October 19.—A despatch from Athens says:—

"The situation appears to be dangerous. There have been royalist demonstrations in the streets. Vice Admiral DuFournet, commander of the Entente allied fleet in the Mediterranean, was hissed and a detachment of French sailors was driven back by a hostile crowd.

"A procession of some four thousand malcontents, headed by the Greek and American flags, stopped outside the American Legation, protested against the landing of foreign marines and demanded the protection of the American Minister, who was absent.

"The demonstrators then paraded the streets, singing the Greek national anthem."

Vice Admiral Fournet has handed to the Greek government a new note of an extremely grave character, says a despatch to the Exchange Telegraph Company from Athens. Following the presentation of the note King Constantine, it is added, came to the capital in haste from the royal residence at Tatoi.

The railway stations of Athens and the Piraeus, the City Hall at the capital and the Castalla Barracks have been occupied by French and Italian sailors to the number of 1,000, while 150 bluejackets, with two machine guns, have been stationed at the Municipal Theatre, according to a Reuter despatch from Athens. An urgent Cabinet council has been summoned.

It is officially explained, adds the despatch, that the detachments landed will assist the police in stopping demonstrations which threaten trouble.

The Entente Allies have taken over the Greek battle ships Kilkis (formerly the United States battleship Idaho), the Lemnos (formerly the Mississippi) and the Averoff, says Reuter's correspondent.

Allied crews were put on board the battle ships, the correspondent says, and the Greek crews were landed and sent to Athens.

The British Legation at Athens explains that the landing of marines at Athens and the Piraeus was merely intended to reinforce the police. It is generally thought, however, that this action was taken to prevent demonstrations like those of Monday.

On October 11 the Allies took over the entire Greek fleet except the Kilkis, the Lemnos and the Averoff. This measure, it was explained unofficially, was intended to insure the safety of the allied fleet, the movements of which had aroused fears of a disturbance at points where the war vessels of the Allies were anchored.

KING CONSTANTINE IS WILDLY CHEERED.

ATHENS, October 19.—Marines from the ships of the Entente Powers to the number of about a thousand have been landed at the Piraeus and have occupied the railway station there and several buildings in Athens.

Immediately after this became known the streets of Athens swarmed with Greeks, frantically cheering King Constantine and chanting the Greek national anthem. Great crowds marched through the streets, thousands gathering in the neighbourhood of the post office square.

The War Minister, General Bracos, ordered out Greek troops and marines to guard every approach to the square in order to prevent any clash

SIR JAMES WATSON'S OPINION CONSIDERED MOST VALUABLE

You catch a little cold to-day, and by to-morrow it has reached the throat, next day the lungs are affected and you wish you had used "Catarrhozone" which kills colds in five minutes. In the first place Catarrhozone soothes the irritated membranes and relieves congestion,—then it cuts out the phlegm and destroys the germs. It enables the blood to retain a natural supply of oxygen, lung-food, and vitality. In any cough bronchitis or Catarrh, it's guaranteed to positively cure. Beware of dangerous substitutes offered under misleading names for genuine Catarrhozone which is sold everywhere, large size containing two months treatment costs $1.00, small size 50c; trial size 25c.

GERMAN AUTHORITIES PLACED STRAW IN PRISONERS' BREAD

Material Was Taken From Mattresses—Former Captain Tells of Life of British Civilians Interned in Germany—Casement Visit Resented—Many Influential Men in One Interment Camp.

Sir Roger Casement, who was executed in England on the charge of being a traitor and had been accused of trying to induce Irish military prisoners in Germany to join the cause of the Central Powers, also sought to get recruits among the Irish civilians interned in the camp at Spandau, near Berlin, it is asserted by Charles Simpson, a mining engineer, interned there from the beginning of the war to April 6, 1916. Simpson came to New York a few days ago.

"Sir Roger visited the camp in January, 1916, and his appearance created quite a commotion,' said Simpson. "Baron von Taube, second in command, made the rounds of the barracks with an interpreter and his guard.

"For some purpose not made clear to us, Taube separated the Scotchmen and Colonials from the native civilian English, and then told the Irish civilians to go to Office 11 for an interview with Casement. The impression was that the Scotch and Colonials were indirectly invited to join the Irish in the interview. None but a few Irish accepted the invitation.

"Some of those who attended the interview told us afterward that Casement sought to have them join an expedition to Ireland, and when his proposal met with a cool reception he made the further suggestion that they could obtain instant release if they would join the German cause. Not one man left the camp, and when Casement departed in his auto hundreds of the men hooted him.

MANY WEALTHY MEN.

"The Spandau camp is the largest civilian internment places in Germany," said Simpson. "There were 4,800 inmates. This number had been reduced to 4,200 when I was released. About 2,000 of the interned men are of means or have influential connections, and require no aid from the Government of Great Britain. Among them are Lord Perth, who often plays chess with the sailors who were take from British ships at the outbreak of the war; another is the nephew of former Premier Balfour, a son of Lord Davenport, a brother of Chief Justice Butler of England, and Hugo Kock, member of the London Stock Exchange, and his brother, who were interned while they were on a visit to their invalid mother in Berlin. Both the brothers are naturalized British subjects.

STRAW IN BREAD.

"The German rations consist of tea on six mornings, with coffee made of roasted acorns on the seventh morning, with 'kreigs brod,' or 'war bread' —a quarter of a loaf, about four inches square, made of 80 per cent. potatoes and 20 per cent. bran, to each man. That is the breakfast. Luncheon on two days consists of fish and potatoes, two days of beef, and three days we get thick soup, with plenty of good vegetables. Dinner consisted of a piece of herring or cheese, or a soup of flour and water.

"An amusing thing happened concerning our bread supply. Our beds were straw, which was thrown into the stalls, on which we lay with a single narrow blanket for cover. After six weeks the Germans provided us with iron beds and straw mattresses. After two months' use the straw mattresses were removed and returned filled with wood shavings. A few days later our bread was found to contain pieces of straw. The men, noticing this, remarked that our beds had been ground up and made into bread. Some of the German guards told us that this was actually the case. They said the straw had been dumped at a brewery, where a part of the building had been improvised as a bakery. Most of the bread was thrown away after that."

It wanted a few minutes to nine when they reached their destination and instructed the hall-boy to inform Mr Vernon that Mlle Mercier wished to see him. The answer came back at once, requesting the boy to show her up. Nothing had been said about her escort.

When, therefore, the two of them appeared at Mr. Vernon's door he at first drew back, greatly surprised and so M. Dumas thought, somewhat alarmed. Upon Mlle. Mercier's explaining that her companion had come alone, as she was unfamiliar with the streets up-town, he appeared to feel more at ease. He darted a keen glance at M. Dumas before admitting him, however, and requested him to wait for a moment in the entrance-hall until he turned on the lights in the living-room.

The apartment consisted of a tiny entrance-hall, parlour or living-room, bedroom, bath, and kitchenette. Mr Vernon led his callers into the living room and requested them to be seated.

The room was a small one, simply furnished, with a table at the center covered with books, papers, and smoking material. Over it hung a large and rather ornate chandelier.

Mr. Dumas sat down, with his back toward the door through which they had entered, and glanced at the man who claimed to be Mr. Charles Vernon. He was tall, heavily built, quite evidently a Frenchman, although his speech did not betray it. His hair was black, as were his mustache and short, curly beard. High up on one cheek-bone Dumas observed a small cut, apparently made while shaving.

He smiled to himself and, under cover of drawing a handkerchief from his hip-pocket, made sure that his revolver was ready for instant use.

"You are the brother of the purser of the Richelieu, M. George Vernon, who suffered such a sad accident?" Dumas inquired pleasantly.

"Yes." Mr. Vernon's reply was crisp and to the point. He turned at once to Mlle Mercier. "You have brought the coin, mademoiselle?" he asked.

"Yes. It is here." The girl drew the franc-piece from her pocket-book and held it in her hand. "You were to give me a thousand dollars for it monsieur," she said, evidently fearing to part with the coin until she had secured the money.

"Here is the money." Vernon drew a bundle of notes from his pocket and laid them carefully on the table before him. "Naturally I cannot turn it over to you until I have examined what I am to buy." He held out his hand eagerly for the coin.

The girl gave it to him, her eyes on the money.

Vernon held the coin under the light for a moment, then glanced sharply at the girl. "Is this the coin, mademoiselle, that was delivered to you yesterday afternoon?"

"Yes. Why?"

Vernon went over to a lighted wall bracket and held the coin beneath it. Standing with his back to the others, they were unable to see just what he was doing. Suddenly he swung around with a snarl of rage.

"It's not the same!" he cried angrily. "You picked up this coin on the floor of room 32 yesterday afternoon, after—"

He paused, suddenly aware that he had said too much, and swept up the package of notes from the table.

"After what, my friend?" inquired Dumas quietly.

Vernon faced his questioner, white with anger.

"I do not see that it is any affair of yours," he growled, then turned again to the girl. "If you have the coin I am willing to pay you a thousand dollars for it. If you have not, then somebody has swindled you out of it. Who was it?"

"I swear, monsieur, that no one has touched the coin since I received it except this gentleman." She indicated Dumas.

"Ha! So that's the game!" Vernon swung furiously toward M. Dumas and his hand went toward his pocket. Before it was half-way there Dumas had covered him with his revolver.

"I arrest you, M. Hartmann," he said quietly, "for the murder of Victor Beinhardt."

The man stepped back and threw up his hands with a grim smile. "I don't know what you're talking about," he said; "but you've got the drop on me, and I never argue with the business end of a revolver."

"An excellent plan, my friend," remarked M. Dumas sententiously as he rose and directed his companion to remove the pistol from their captive's pocket.

The girl started to obey.

Dumas, intent on the man before him, failed to hear a footfall, light as a cat's, on the carpet behind him. In another moment he felt a terrific blow upon his head, his revolver went off in the air, and he sank to the floor unconscious.

His last impression was that hearing the terrified screams of Mlle Mercier. Then he seemed to be sailing away on a fiery red cloud.

CHAPTER VII

THE GOLD LOCKET

It was after ten o'clock in the evening, and Grace Duvall, in her room at the hotel, was beginning to wonder what had become of M. Lefevre and her husband.

Everything that had happened since the arrival of the Richelieu had been exactly contrary to her wishes and her expectations.

She and Richard had planned to leave at once for Washington, accompanied by the prefect, who was to spend a delightful month upon their farm near that city, enjoying the rest and quiet of the country. Now, by some trick of fate, they were suddenly whirled into a criminal investigation that bid fair to upset all their plans.

She had at first opposed the idea of M Lefevre's taking up the case of the purser's death, but Richard had pointed out to her that its solution would occupy as most but a day or two, and she had been forced to yield as gracefully as she could.

Now both the prefect and her husband had disappeared. She had heard nothing of either of them since noon, and she was beginning to feel distinct ly alarmed. Richard had not confided in her regarding his plans.

All that he had said was that he was assisting M. Lefevre, and would either return with him at ten that night or would telephone to her. So far he had done neither. She sat in restless silence trying to read a magazine, with one eye on the clock, waiting for the telephone bill to ring.

When the booming of a bell in the distance suddenly brought her to a realization of the fact that it was eleven o'clock, she jumped up, threw down the book, and began to put on her hat with nervous haste.

Grace had too often shared in her husband's adventurous work to hesitate in the least about going out alone at this hour of the night. Something told her that things had not gone well. She left a note on the table, explaining her movements and descended to the sidewalk.

A taxicab stood waiting before the door. She jumped in and ordered the chauffeur to drive to the Hotel Rochambeau.

The whole affair alarmed her greatly. Why had Richard not telephoned her and eased her fears? A sense of danger, of apprehension, came over her. During the brief period of their married life she and Richard had been together almost constantly.

She often said that when any danger threatened him she knew it, so closely were they in sympathy. Now she felt sure that something serious had happened to him.

Her idea in going to the Hotel Rochambeau was quite simple. She knew, from what Richard had told her of the case, that Estelle Mercier was likely to be the medium through which the man Hartmann would be traced.

Just why this was the case, just what Hartmann's reasons for keeping in touch with the young French girl were, she did not know; but she made up her mind to find her and from her obtain, if possible, the facts.

Upon inquiring at the hotel desk for the maid, she was informed that the girl had gone out. Grace was almost frantic upon learning this.

Where had the girl gone? The hotel people did not know. She insisted that she be permitted to go to Mlle. Mercier's room.

It was most irregular, the proprietor, a heavy set Frenchman, shrugged. He could not possibly allow it. His hotel had already received enough unpleasant notoriety on account of the murder of Reinhardt. He regarded Grace coldly, and intimated that he did do nothing for her.

The girl was desperate. "You shall go with me to her room," she assured the proprietor. "I am a detective engaged on the murder case. It is absolutely necessary that I should find out where Mlle. Mercier has gone. It is barely possible that there may be some letter, some paper, in her room which will tell me. Come with me, please, and see that I remove nothing. I ask it in the name of the law."

It was a bluff, certainly; but the proprietor was impressed. He was anxious to have the murder matter closed up and done with. There could be no harm in allowing this young woman to visit Mlle. Mercier's room under his watchful eye. He led the way up the stairs.

Three long flights brought them to the attic. A tiny box like room under the roof proved to be that of the maid. Grace entered, followed by the proprietor, and glanced about.

On the chest of drawers which served as a bureau she saw a letter lying open. She picked it up and read it. It was the letter which the man signing himself Charles Vernon had sent to the girl, offering her a thousand dollars for the franc-piece.

Grace hurriedly noted the address of the apartment on One Hundred and Tenth Street and turned to the proprietor.

"Mlle. Mercier has gone to an address on One Hundred and Tenth Street which is given in this letter. I shall go there at once. That is all I wish here."

The proprietor read the letter in turn. "A thousand dollars!" he exclaimed, his eyes protruding. "She is a lucky girl, I should say. A thousand dollars! Mon Dieu!"

"Whether she is lucky or not," Grace remarked gravely, as she thrust the letter into her pocketbook, "remains to be seen. I only hope that no harm has come to her. I thank you for your courtesy, monsieur. It may prove the means of saving the girl, as well as others, from great danger." She climbed back into the taxi in which she had come and directed the chauffeur to take her to the address on One Hundred and Tenth Street as quickly as he could get there.

It was close to midnight when the taxicab turned into One Hundred and Tenth Street and proceeded slowly up the block, the chauffeur searching for the number. In a few moments he had found it, and Grace, ordering him to wait for her, went up to the door.

CAN'T CONFISCATE LIQUOR

Nothing Said About it in the Ontario Temperance Act.

OTTAWA, Oct. 14.—An important legal point in connection with the Ontario Temperance Act was brought up in the Police Court this morning when defending counsel in the case of the Russell Hotel, charged with having illegally stored a quantity of liquor on its premises, pleaded guilty to the charge, but denied the right of the presiding magistrate to issue an order for the confiscation of the liquor, on the grounds that there was no provision in the act in this regard.

Counsel for the prosecution admitted that as far as he could see, the contentions of the defendants were correct. Magistrate Ailkwith reserved his decision.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

How They Got Rid of Him

By MARJORIE CLOUGH

The village of Bubbling Rock—named for a spring from which gushed an abundance of pure water—was a very quiet community. There were a couple of dozen married couples with children—some grown to manhood and womanhood, but most of them still children. For Bubbling Rock was a new settlement in the new colony of Virginia, and old persons are seldom pioneers. The inhabitants cultivated the tobacco plant, at which they made a good living, and so long as they were free to worship God in their own way they were content.

But the peace of Bubbling Rock was destined to be interrupted. A man—an unmarried man—came there from Jamestown, who taught the men of the town to which he came games of chance. He naturally won their money, but set them to gambling among themselves. This interchange of their cupds with one another would not have been objectionable if it had not set them to quarreling. For there is nothing that will so soon make enemies of friends as winning each other's money. Instead of working the men were constantly gambling, and not only was the tobacco neglected, but not a day passed but there was a fracas.

When a number of men who had previously been fast friends had bloodied one another's noses and one man had been killed, the wives and mothers of Bubbling Rock put their heads together with a view to getting rid of the instigator of the trouble. The deliberations were behind closed doors, and the women were pledged not to reveal the plan adopted.

Those were the days when the population of Virginia was kept up and increased by shipments of persons of all grades, from the younger sons of noblemen to the most hardened criminal. The highest and the lowest met on shipboard and on arrival scattered themselves over the new country.

To the surprise of the husbands of Bubbling Rock their wives suddenly seemed to take a fancy to the gambler who had made all the trouble. They invited him to their houses, and one or two of those having the most seductive tongues held up before him the advantages of matrimony.

"Get married," said Mrs. Ralston, "and become one of us. It is only as a husband that you can achieve real happiness. This is a lonely country, and its loneliness can only be done away with by the companionship that is to be found in wedlock."

"Where shall I find a wife?" asked the gambler. "There are five men to one woman in the colony."

"Leave that to me," replied the lady. "I'll find you a wife who I will guarantee will change your life completely. She is coming out from England and is due to arrive within a fortnight."

The gambler seemed grateful for the kindly interest the lady took in his welfare and expressed himself glad at the prospect of meeting her friend.

Ten days later a ship arrived from England, bringing a cargo of women sent out to be wives for the single men of the colony. Mrs. Ralston boarded the vessel and was closeted with the captain for a few minutes, at the end of which time he summoned a young woman, to whom he said:

"You need not be put up with the rest for a husband. This lady will provide for you." Then he left the two women together.

Eunice Dargin, the young woman who had just arrived, was rather small and had mild blue eyes and golden tresses. She was the comeliest of all the women on the ship. Mrs. Ralston took her ashore with her and domiciled her under her own roof. That night she sent for the gambler and introduced him to her friend.

The next day the man for whom this gentle lass was intended discharged the cost of her transportation in tobacco and there was a wedding at the house of Mrs. Ralston.

That night the stillness of the settlement was broken by voices raised in anger emanating from the home of the man the lady had arranged to make happy. A man and a woman's voice were raised alternately in crescendo, the woman's constantly gaining the ascendancy till the sound of some heavy weight striking against the wall of the house put an end to the man's side of the argument. Then the slamming of a door was heard and all was still.

The next morning all the men in Bubbling Rock peeped from their windows to see what had been the end of the previous bridal night amenities. Not so the women. They were all posted. When the door of the gambler's home opened the meek looking bride stepped forth. Then every woman in Bubbling Rock knew that the gambler had vanished.

When the plan adopted by the wives to get rid of the gambler leaked out it was learned that on the arrival of the cargo of women sent over for wives Mrs. Ralston had asked the captain for the one bearing the worst reputation of all. He had produced the blue eyed, golden haired creature, who looked as gentle as a fawn. She had troubled the police of London more than any other person in that wicked city. To get rid of her they had sent her to Virginia.

The problem remained to get rid of the means by which the gambler was ejected. This was accomplished by giving her to an Indian chief. Then for the first time in her life she behaved herself.

If Food Disagrees Drink Hot Water

When food lies like lead in the stomach and you have that uncomfortable, distended feeling, it is because of insufficient blood supply to the stomach, combined with acid and food fermentation. In such cases try the plan now followed in many hospitals and advised by many eminent physicians of taking a teaspoonful of pure bisurated magnesia in half a glass of water, as hot as you can comfortably drink it. The hot water draws the blood to the stomach and the bisurated magnesia, as any physician can tell you, instantly neutralizes the acid and stops the food fermentation. Try this simple plan and you will be astonished at the immediate feeling of relief and comfort that always follows the restoration of the normal process of digestion. People who find it inconvenient at times to secure hot water and travelers who are frequently obliged to take hasty meals poorly prepared, should always take two or three five-grain tablets of Bisurated Magnesia after meals to prevent fermentation and neutralize the acid in their stomach.

REICHSTAG PLAN PUT VORWAERTS UNDER BAN.

Amsterdam, Oct. 14.—The Berlin Vorwaerts incurred the most recent order for its suppression by advocating the appointment of a Reichstag committee for foreign affairs, according to Berlin dispatches received here.

Commenting on the proposal, the Vorwaerts said that if it was adopted the antagonists of Chancellor von Bethmann-Hollweg would have an opportunity to ask for his dismissal. It added that the vote would show what the Reichstag thinks of Germany's war aims. The article concluded: "This again proves the necessity of Germany having a system of Parliamentary Government."

LOVER'S LIGHT.

When Eden's fair first day came to its close
In silken twilight, then the moon arose
To shed its radiance o'er the garden fair—
To smile upon the lovers nestled there.

So, through the ages, Love has deified
The moon—has sought it, taken it as guide.
When hearts beat quick, when whispered words fall slow,
The moon has taught the world the way to go.

Again, this night, the moon shall shed its beams
O'er myriad lovers—bless their happy dreams—
Give benediction from high Heaven above
To all the breathing world that is in love.

FIRST GAS ATTACK AT YPRES DESCRIBED

Blinded, Choking Canadians Fought Back Against Grey Mists and Green Cloud

The following interval narrative of the trial of the Canadians in the second Battle of Ypres is given by Rameo Boule, a soldier of French-Canadian extraction, who returned in 1916 from the front. He writes: Arthur Robillard, a car conductor back in Montreal, was on guard duty. I was roused when he fell over me. As I sat up something got me by the throat and began to strangle out my life. The air was rent with awful cries. Many of my comrades lay dying and dead about me. I hurled myself in semi-madness into a huge crater near by, made by a bursting shell. There was a little muddy water at the bottom, and I fell in it, face down. The water relieved me a little, and I wet my handkerchief in it and covered my face. The green, stinking air was thus shut out, and I began to breathe easier. I crawled out, and half blindly sought my unconscious chum, dragging him back ten yards into the crater where the water was. I laid him face downward there, and he, too, revived a little, and there we lay, waiting for death.

Always Fighting

Ten minutes later, I heard a shouting, and knew that the Germans were coming fast. Then I ran back into my trench, got my gun, and began firing as fast I could. The rifle soon became so hot that it burned my hands. I threw it down and began throwing bombs. The order to retreat to the next trench came. My half-strangled comrade was with me. We ran together and, looking back, saw the big gray fellows of the Teuton army leaping down into our trench. I forget the rheumatism from which I had been suffering for several days when I saw them come. Somehow we got hold of two machine guns, and placed them where they would do the most good. One of these was running 600 shots a minute, and the other—blessed French destroyer!—was pouring out death at the rate of 700 shots a minute. I shall never forget those Germans. When our guns suddenly spoke their front line melted; their second crumpled before this destruction; but on, on, on they came, unflinching, marching with even steps into certain death. We were like lions at bay. It was our lives or the Germans. Then, as fourteen of us fought together, a bomb dropped amidst us, and killed eleven. I came to consciousness, lying in the bottom of a trench with Roy leaning over me.

Miraculous Escape

"Are you living, Romeo?" he exclaimed in amazement. I rose dizzily. He and I an' one other stood alone among our eleven dead friends. Then Roy told me that I had been blown clear of the trench, twenty feet from where I stood, and that he had braved death to secure, so he supposed, my dead body. A careful examination showed that my only injury was a bruise on the calf of my leg, where the round surface of a flying shard had struck me, but without breaking the skin.

"I'm not afraid now," I told Roy. And from then on I and all my soldier friends believed my life was charmed and that the Germans could not kill me.

BLOCK CANADA'S EFFORTS

Soulless Efforts of Certain Great British Munitioners

Financial Post (Toronto) says: A soulless group of munition manufacturers in the United Kingdom at the outbreak of the war endeavored to prevent any outside manufacturers from getting into the munition business, and they particularly regarded Canadian manufacturers getting any orders. These men—and those of them are among the biggest in the munition industry in England—have no Imperial spirit or even a broad outlook on business and it will be a long time before Canadian manufacturers will forget the efforts made by these people to keep them out of the Russian markets. At a meeting of munition manufacturers in London, the head of a large Canadian industrial concern solicited the aid of a leading British company, in securing Russian orders. The British manufacturer replied frankly and even brutally, that he would do everything he could to prevent Canadians getting into the Russian munition business; that they wanted it for themselves. In fact they did not want Canadians to receive even British orders.

WAR BICYCLES STRONG

The bicycle is playing a very important part in the war. But it must not be thought that the bicycle of the soldier altogether resembles that of the civilian, except in looks. As a matter of fact, the war bicycle is generally built of special fittings and latest carefully finished. It weighs nearer 50lb. than 25lb. when ready for the road, and is not supposed to be a vehicle of speed. If a company of cyclists can average seven miles an hour when on the road, they are travelling more than twice the normal speed of infantry, and this great saving of time is made at the smallest expense, for the bicycle requires no food and only a minimum of attention.

SOLITUDE IS SERIOUS.

Jest and Jollity Come When Men Mingle With Their Fellows.

The more people in a conversation the less serious it is. One man, talking to himself, is invariably serious. Two men conversing will joke briefly once in the half hour. Three men will talk more at random, throwing out jests whenever they come to mind. When four men come together casually they go off like a string of firecrackers, one after the other. Add the wives of these four men and the conversation becomes a combination of earthquake and volcano—a shifting, heaving, unsteady footing of puns, personalities, figgles, witticisms, quaint drolleries, innuendos, and roars of laughter. Add a ball full of human nature to a room full of the same and it fizzes like your favourite soda water.

This happens whether you wish it to or not. If it is your day to be serious you may maintain a stiff face for a while, but in the end you will crack a mild joke, and then you are done for. It isn't your fault. You cracked that joke in self-defence — because the rest of the company simply wouldn't listen to anything else you had to say.

It is a matter of the greatest common divisor. Two men have more beliefs and interests in common than three can possibly have. You and your friend Jones talk on the train about music and boating and Maupassant. When Williams rides with you the talk is confined to boating, because he has no music in his soul and hasn't read a line of French literature. He wants to talk about Airedales and South American trade; but you know nothing about the latter and care less, and Jones thinks it a crime to keep a pet. So you talk aquatics. By the time you have reached the office and there are eight or ten of you together, the only common topic left is the innocuous joke.

All undisciplined gatherings become jesting bees. The tendency is unfortunate, for Americans do too little thinking as it is. Perhaps some of the lapses of democracy are traceable to this cause. Conventions and congresses are notoriously light-minded.—San Francisco Bulletin.

OUR FRENCH-CANADIANS.

The story of the courage and elan of the French-Canadian volunteers at Courcelette makes inspiring reading. Our fellow-Canadians of the French speech have all the initiative of soldiers of the New World and all the spirit and dash of soldiers of Old France. This story will re-echo through Quebec like a trumpet call, and it is impossible that these brave lads shall be left without the support which their bravery deserves. Montreal has been taking a leading place in the recruiting column of late. The patient and faithful work of the men who have been sowing the seed here, is being abundantly repaid. The reaction may have been a trifle more rapid in the West; but it is appearing now in Quebec, at the very moment when more men are sorely needed. Our public men of both parties have at last taken Bourassaism by the throat, and French-Canadian audiences heartily hiss the misguided mediaevalist who has sought to mislead them.—Montreal Star.

Pale Cheeked Women Told About Restoring A Rosy Complexion

A few years ago the girl with pale, drawn cheeks scarcely knew what to do in order to restore her fading appearance. At that time there was no blood-food medium made that really would put color and strength into systems that were more or less worn out.

To-day it's different. The blood can be quickly nourished, can be made rich, red, and healthy. All you have to do is take two Ferrozone Tablets with a sip or two of water after meals. The effect is almost magical.

Mothers, look at your children. Are they ruddy and strong—do they eat and sleep well, or are they pale, weak, and anaemic?

FERROZONE will rebuild them. Take your own case—is your blood strong and rich? Have you that old-time strength and vigor, or are you somewhat under the weather?

FERROZONE will supply the strengthening elements you require. It is a blood-forming, nourishing tonic that makes every ailing person well.

FERROZONE is a marvellous remedy, it contains in concentrated form certain rare qualities that especially fit it in cases of anaemic, poor color, thin blood, tiredness, and loss of weight.

Every day you put off using FERROZONE you lose ground. Get it to-day, sold in 50 cent boxes by all dealers, or by mail from the Catarrhozone Co., Kingston, Ont.

TIRED OUT KIDNEYS

Kidney troubles are so frightfully common because the kidneys are so easily upset by overwork or excesses in eating and drinking. Ours is offered not by whipping them on to renewed effort but by awakening the action of the liver and bowels by the use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. This rests the kidneys and makes them well. Backache and urinary disorders then disappear.

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

LADY'S DRESS.

By Anabel Worthington.

7936

An unusual method in employing two materials stamps this dress as one of original design, yet it reflects the style tendencies of the season.

The overblouse is merely suggested, with the bib section that is tacked over the fronts of the waist: small buttons close together claim attention, decorating above the bust, and a tiny plait in each half of the bib shape its lower part: the sleeve has a distinctly smart cuff that closes with loops and buttons; the square neck is collared with material in the waist.

The skirt is a lovely four gore plaited model. Either side of the front panel, which is button trimmed to match the bib, plaits are laid, the back being similar to the front save for the decoration of buttons. A silk girdle is arranged about the top of the skirt to hide where it joins the waist.

Poplin, novelty taffeta, cotton gabardine and serge are among the leading fall fabrics that are suitable for this design, with crepe or similar material for the waist.

The pattern No. 7,936 is cut in sizes 36 to 42. To make it the 36 will require 5¼ yards of 36 inch material for the skirt, bib and cuffs; for the remainder of the dress 2⅛ yards of 36 inch goods. In all one material, 7¼ yards of 36 inch goods will be required.

You may obtain the pattern by sending 10 cents to the office of this publication.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required, and age of a child.

Price 15 cents, or 2 for 25 cents.

Sure Way To Get Rid of Dandruff

There is one sure way that never fails to remove dandruff completely and that is to dissolve it. This destroys it entirely. To do this, just get about four ounces of plain, ordinary liquid arvin; apply it at night when retiring; use enough to moisten the scalp and rub it in gently with the finger tips.

By morning, most if not all, of your dandruff will be gone, and three or four more applications will completely dissolve and entirely destroy every single sign and trace of it, no matter how much dandruff you may have.

You will find, too, that all itching and digging of the scalp will stop instantly, and your hair will be fluffy, lustrous, glossy, silky and soft, and look and feel a hundred times better.

You can get liquid arvon at any drug store. It is inexpensive, and four ounces is all you will need. This simple remedy has never been known to fail. [illegible]

Eggs are more plentiful this week and the price has eased off slightly. Butter is holding around 35 to 40c.

ORIGIN OF WHITE BREAD.

First Used by London Citizen for Sake of Harmony.

Referring to my recent mention of bread and bread making, I have come across some particulars about the white bread most of us eat at this period, says "Diogenes" in the Vancouver Province. White flour did not come into existence till about a century ago, when a London citizen named Hugh Paddington decided to do something unusual at a dinner. As white was fashionable at that particular period, Paddington determined to have all the food at the feast of a colour quite different from their natural hue, with a leaning toward white. To match the tablecloth he would have the bread white. He called a Hungarian miller into conference, and ordered flour ground especially for the occasion. Such a thing never had been heard of before —a perfectly white flour. Produced from the ground grain of the wheat, flour naturally took on the commingled colours of the grain, and therefore was dark. But Paddington wanted it white—snow white. It was a hard task for the miller, but after many efforts he succeeded in producing the desired results by selecting only the white, lifeless, starchy portions of the grain and discarding all others. This being accomplished, the epicure was delighted. The rest of the colour scheme was easy. As he had expected, his dinner proved the novelty of the day, and the bread was a tremendous hit.

SIR SAM TOO BUSY.

Will Not Comment on Haig Condemnation of Ross Rifle.

OTTAWA, Oct. 17. — Sir Sam Hughes was asked for comment yesterday regarding the Lloyd George statement that General Haig had condemned the Ross rifle on his own initiative.

"No," said the Minister, with emphasis. "I have nothing to say about it. The war is on and I have something else to bother about."

He murmured something about Lloyd George mentioning Gen. Byng, not Gen. Haig.

SALTS FINE FOR ACHING KIDNEYS

We eat too much meat which clogs Kidneys, then the Back hurts

Most folks forget that the kidneys, like the bowels, get sluggish and clogged and need a flushing occasionally, else we have backache and dull misery in the kidney region, severe headaches, rheumatic twinges, torpid liver, acid stomach, sleeplessness and all sorts of bladder disorders.

You simply must keep your kidneys active and clean, and the moment you feel an ache or pain in the kidney region, get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any good drug store here, take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and is harmless to flush clogged kidneys, and stimulate them to normal activity. It also neutralizes the acids in the urine so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is harmless; inexpensive; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everybody should take now and then to keep their kidneys clean, thus avoiding serious complications.

A well-known local druggist says he sells lots of Jad Salts to folks who believe in overcoming kidney trouble while it is only trouble.

The message read: "German submarine sunk east Nantucket." Officers of the North Pacific said the cruiser was laying off this coast. Near the Roumanian frontier in the Dorna Vatra region stubborn enemy attacks were repelled and the enemy driven back.

Campbell, the chief recruiting officer for this district, and Capt. Kenney, also of the district recruiting staff. Both officers are splendid speakers and a big crowd is expected to hear their addresses. The meeting is under the auspices of the Speakers' Patriotic League.

LOCAL PASTORS ARE ATTENDING THE CONVENTION

Rev. John Galt of Gilmour Memorial Church Takes Issue With Mr. Strachan Challenge to Churches.

CHURCH UNION

HAMILTON, Oct. 19.—Baptists are nothing if not radical, whether in theology or politics, and the twenty-ninth annual Baptist Convention of Ontario and Quebec went immediately to the root of things at the opening session yesterday afternoon in James street Baptist church.

Rev. James Strachan of Galt, in a vigorous paper on the work of the Church in the light of the present world-crisis, took a very pessimistic view of the present and past state of civilization. He advocated getting down to the very root of Christianity and starting afresh at the beginning. He would set aside the teachings of St. Paul for the sake of finding a better interpretation of the teachings of JJesus. This rather gloomy view of things received some support from Rev. W. Weisle, a German Baptist minister of New Hamburg, who, while holding that he was an ally of Great Britain, thought that the war was a condemnation of militarism throughout the world, and must come to an end if Christianity is to survive.

Other speakers protested strongly against the view that Christianity was at stake. They contended for the preaching of the old Evangelists as the only means of reconstructing the shattered scheme of things.

War's Challenge to Faith.

The President, Rev. J. G. Brown, in his annual address spoke on "The War a Challenge to Faith." He said in part:

"The outbreak of war in August, 1914, came as a distinct shock and surprise. A war between 'Christian' nations, bound together by so many ties and after eighteen centuries of Christian enlightenment, seemed almost unthinkable. Men began to ask: 'Is there a God, and if so, has He any relation to the lives of men and nations? Why is He silent? Why does He not interfere and stop the war? For a time the infidel and the scoffer had their day. The war had proved, they declared, that Christianity had failed at the greatest crisis in human history, and that while it might have some social influence it was utterly impotent within the sphere of international politics. Christ again seemed before Pilate, speechless, and condemned.

"At first those who sought for the real cause of the war were inclined to lay the blame solely upon the ambition of Germany for world-power, but a closer study brought to light

NEWS OF HUSBAND'S DEATH FOLLOWS REPORT OF INJURY TO SON

Mrs. Houghton, Orpington Road, Notified That Her Husband Pte. Geo. Houghton is Officially Reported Killed in Action---Her Son Was Reported on Tuesday as Severely Wounded---Lindsay Expects to Get the 235th ---To-day's General Military News.

Two days after she had been notified that her son, Pte. Jas. Houghton, of the 21st Battalion, had been severely wounded in the recent fighting, fate has dealt Mrs. Elizabeth Houghton, Orpington Road, a second and still more tragic blow. This morning she received an official message from Ottawa conveying the sad information that her husband, Pte. George Houghton, Canadian Infantry, is officially reported killed in action on Oct. 4th. Pte. Houghton enlisted in Peterborough at the beginning of the big campaign inaugurated in August, 1915, by the Speakers' Patriotic League. The recruits who joined at that time were allowed to choose between going to Barrie field to join the 59th Battalion or to remain with the nucleus of the new Peterborough battalion. Pte. Houghton decided to go to Barriefield and as a result went overseas as a member of the 59th Battalion, afterwards being transferred from another Canadian battalion at the front. Pte. Houghton, who was born in England, had had seven years service with a British volunteer regiment to his credit. He was a mason by trade and highly respected by all who knew him. He was thirty-nine years of age at the time of his enlistment.

The sympathy of the community will go out to Mrs. Houghton with her husband dead and her son, who went overseas with the 21st Battalion, lying seriously wounded in hospital.

Pte. Maidment Wounded.

Miss Florence Maidment, at the Margaret Cox Home for Girls, received official news from Ottawa this morning that her brother, Pte. Edward Maidment, Canadian Infantry, is officially reported admitted to No. 24 General Hospital, Etaples, France, on Oct. 10th, with a gun shot wound in the eye. Pte. Maidment did not enlist in Peterborough.

The following is from the Lindsay Post.

As was announced in Tuesday's issue, Brigadier-Gen. R. T. D. Hemmins, Officer Commanding the Third Military District, accompanied by his orderly officer, Capt. Kirk, were in town Monday on business in connection with the Third Military District. The real object of the trip, it is said, was to look into the advisability of transferring the 226th Battalion (or at least a portion of it) now in process of formation at Bowmanville, either to Lindsay or Peterborough. The Bowmanville battalion has up to date enlisted about 450 men, and the field as a recruiting centre has become exhausted. The officers in charge are in favour of a transfer to new territory, preferably this town or Peterborough, so that the work can be continued and the battalion brought up to its full strength.

Nothing definite, of course, was decided upon.

Charged With Desertion.

The Kingston Whig says: Two soldiers were rounded up by Lieut. James Graham, provost marshall for No. 3 military district, on a charge of desertion and taken to the police station. One is alleged to have deserted from an Ottawa battalion, and was taken to Ottawa on Tuesday afternoon. The other, who is a Peterborough man, belongs to a local battalion, and was taken to Barriefield camp.

The Kingston Whig says:

Military District No. 3 has already recruited in proportion of the Dominions call for 500,000 volunteers, it having supplied 36,896 men for units raised here and fully 3,000 for units in other districts.

The figures are very gratifying to the officers at headquarters, who until a recent organization of a recruiting staff, had the full responsibility of securing men for the colours. It remains now for the recruiting staff to carry this district far over the record number and keep its splendid reputation above that of other districts in Canada.

When the Premier on last New Year's Day asked for half a million men there were head shakings that meant that such a statement would be suitable for one who talked in his sleep. All their predictions have gone wrong, however, insofar as this military district is concerned. Its part —40,330—has been secured, and are now serving their country.

Some time ago the Whig requested Lieut.-Col. Mulloy to furnish the official figures, and he gave the information that half a million from Canada meant thirteen per cent. The population of Canada was based on the last census of 3,721,067 males. There is a population of 310,225 males in No. 3 Military District, which gives the above total of 40,330 required for overseas service.

"When the latest recruiting return was issued on Tuesday it was shown that 251 more men were enlisted. This brings the grand total of actual men serving at 36,896. It has been estimated that fully 3,000 men have joined units in Montreal and Toronto.

It is the intention of the Militia Department to standardize all of the training camps in Canada and put each on a system that will make them all equal in training facilities, says the Kingston Whig. Lieut.-Col. Mills, who went overseas with the second battalion, has been appointed to make a report on this matter, and will make an exceedingly good one about Barriefield after having been here for several days.

In all probability one innovation that will be brought about will be permanent buildings, which will prevent inconvenience of wet clothes after a spell of wet weather. With

Invaders Are Hurled Back Over Frontier

Roumanian Situation Has Taken On Very Distinct Turn For the Better — Bucharest Announcement Says All the Military News is Re-assuring.

TIDE HAS TURNED

LONDON, Oct. 19.—The Roumanian situation took on a very distinct turn for the better to-day. There is strong reason to hope that King Ferdinand's country will not suffer a repetition of the Serbian tragedy. There is a ringing note of optimism not evident before in to-day's Bucharest official announcement that "All the military news is reassuring." That the tide of battle has turned in favour of the Roumanians is indicated also in the complete absence of news from Sofia and Berlin regarding Falkenhayn's operations.

Although the Teutons continued their attack on the whole Carpathian front to-day, they failed to gain an inch. The Roumanians, on the other hand, vastly encouraged by the breaking down of the enemy's offensive at their very doors, flung themselves forward to the attack with fresh vigour, and in the important sector south of Kronstadt, near Predeal, drove the Teutons back on the Transylvania slope.

In the Buzen valley another success was obtained, the Teutons being hurled back nearly a mile after the Roumanian artillery had [illegible] the enemy. In all the various engagements throughout the front the Roumanians inflicted severe losses on the enemy, taking scores of prisoners and crippling the Teuton batteries beyond use. Only at two points on the frontier—at the Torhenyer and Grymes Passes — are Falkenhayn's troops still on Roumanian territory, and at both these places their grip is slowly being weakened.

Meanwhile, every hour of respite from the furious assaults of the enemy is being utilized by the Roumanians in strengthening their frontier defences and preparing for the coming great counter-blow. In this movement they will enlist the aid of the formidable Russian forces, to which belong much of the credit for turning back the enemy's hosts at the gateways of Roumania.

Recent communications from Bucharest have based the hope of Roumania on the defence of the Carpathian passes. "As a result of changes in command, "new measures are being taken for resistance." These new measures were the bulwarking of the gateways through the mountains, a step which proved the saving of the country.

Success at All Points.

The Roumanian War Office communication issued to-day, says:

"On the northern and north-western fronts there have been artillery actions to the west of Tulghes and Bucas. The enemy attacks were repulsed. We took ninety prisoners. In Bolowus we also took two officers and 65 men prisoners. In the Trotus Valley fighting continues. Up to the present we have taken one officer and one hundred men prisoners. In the Uzul Valley all enemy attacks have been sanguinarily driven back beyond the frontier.

"I the Oitus Valley both attacks and counter-attacks continue with the same violence. We have inflicted heavy losses on the enemy, capturing three officers and a hundred men. In the region of Verzacy minor engagements took place to the west of the frontier. The enemy has been repulsed in the Buzul (Buzeu) Valley. Our artillery dismantled an enemy gun, and forced the advanced enemy lines to be withdrawn one kilometre.

"To the north of Tabiabutat there have been artillery duels.

"Calm prevails at Bratocea and Predeius. At Predeal there has been an intense artillery duel and violent engagements at Mateais. We took

Zep Souvenirs Sold For Red Cross

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

BANDSMEN FROM THE 155TH BAND FOR LOCAL BATTALION

Number of Musicians for 247th Will Arrive this Evening--Peterboro Battalion Had Best Days Recruiting Yesterday, Since It Was Authorized.

FIVE MEN TAKEN ON

Like the Rumanian crisis, the situation in regard to the 247th Battalion has taken a turn very distinctly for the better. Not only was yesterday the best day since the battalion was organized, with five recruits taken on the strength, but to-day Lt.-Col. Johnston was informed by Col. Wilson of the headquarters staff, that a number of bandsmen from the band of the 155th Battalion have been transferred to the 247th, and will arrive in the city to-night. They will form the neucleus of a band for the new battalion, and Bandmaster Chadwick has a number of local prospects who are expected to join as soon as the organization of the band is proceeded with.

It is not understood locally just what has been done with the 155th Band, which was one of the best at Barriefield. It had been announced that the Band would not go overseas with the 155th, but would be retained for recruiting purposes. The announcement that a number of the bandsmen are being sent to Peterborough would make it appear as if the bandsmen were being divided up among the different battalions recruiting.

Lt.-Col Johnston was in Ottawa yesterday, and held a conference with Lieut.-General Sir Sam Hughes. Seen to-day by the Examiner he had nothing to say in regard to the purposes or results of his trip to the Capital.

The 247th had the best day of their existence, from a recruiting standpoint, yesterday, when five recruits were taken on the strength of the battalion. They were as follows:

James A. Faulkner, Coboconk.
S. A. Boyd, Peterborough.
H. L. Blackwell, R R No. 2
Chas. Deline, Peterborough
Geo L. Spencer, Hall's Glen.

The North Hastings end of the district allotted to the 247th is being organized and Lt.-Col. Johnston has recommended the appointment of several officers from that section.

CRIMINAL NEGLECT.

It is difficult to trace, with any considerable directness, the cause of the high prices that in a land of plenty affect certain articles, but in the case of one article, print paper, the cause is outstanding. An article furnished by the Canadian Forestry Association, published elsewhere in this issue, shows that the high price of paper to Canadian publishers has, independently of other causes, been greatly contributed to by the destruction by forest fires, of balsam and spruce forests. Experts say that with care in cutting, (leaving immature timber to grow) and protection from fire, pulp wood areas can be made to furnish a perpetual crop. A worth-while paper and pulp mill costs something like a million dollars. It is a fixture. It is easily seen now the destruction by fire of easily accessible stands of it—raw material, adds expensive transportation cost to other necessary costs. It is a fact that lack of fire protection has reduced near-at-hand supplies of pulp wood more than actual cutting. This summer's forest fires in Northern Ontario devastated 1,200 square miles—three quarters of a million acres. The government of Ontario, through the agency of the fire fund, by the destruction of pulp forests at the doors of the mills, involving longer drive or rail haul, has automatically increased the cost of manufacture; the cost to the printer and, if the economic sequence is pursued, the cost of newspapers and printing to the public. The neglect of the Ontario government to adopt, as can easily be done, fairly adequate protective measures against forest fires, on economic grounds alone, not to speak of loss of life and suffering, means something very like criminal neglect; as indifferent to provincial and public interest as would be the city of Peterborough, if it neglected to keep an effective fire department.

THE PROOF OF THE PUDDING.

The action of Alderman Edgar at the Council meeting on Tuesday night, in moving a resolution, asking the Dominion Government to remove the customs duty from foodstuffs that are of high cost in Canada, suggests comment. Alderman Edgar is a Conservative, and being an official in the party, secretary of the Conservative association of Peterborough, his demand has a quasi official flavour. As a member of the party that in 1911, classed as traitors, the Liberals who at that time advocated the removal of such customs duties as Alderman Edgar now wants wiped out, and as an official member of a party whose slogan was "no truck nor trade with the Yankees". Ald. Edgar's course is extremely significant, and its significance is not lessened by the fact that his resolution was unanimously adopted by the Council, with a majority of Conservatives comprising it; nor is it lessened by the fact that Alderman Edgar's act of economic reorientation was made in face of the protest a day or two ago by the Conservative organ, the Review, which certifies Mr. Cowan, on the head of his advocacy of more open markets, and fervely pleads the great benefits and merits of high tariff trade barriers. Alderman Edgar is not to be charged with inconsistency. He is rather to be credited with the courage of convictions forced upon him by the logic of fact. He is only one amongst thousands in Canada that have seen and felt, the sophisms of theory discredited by the facts of experience. If the Liberals in 1911 were denounced as traitors because they demanded freer markets, less restricted exchange of the necessaries of life, either that charge was false or Alderman Edgar is himself a traitor in demanding to-day under the pinch of high prices, the application of a principle, that if adopted four years ago would undoubtedly have had an influence in moderating food-stuff prices, and lowering the high range of food prices, that contribute to the presently oppressive high cost of living. He laughs best who laughs last. Those who went down to defeat fighting for the principles of freer markets, fighting for the people, have in some sort a moral compensation in being told by their opponents that they were right. There is more truth and suggestion than elegance in the saying that "the proof of the pudding is in the eating"; and Alderman Edgar, as a type of a large class, has felt the high tariff pudding of rather too high flavour for his pocket or his palate.

A SOURCE OF ANXIETY.

The following article from the Toronto Star, deals with a situation that seems to be hostile to very serious and important national and imperial interests ,and no thoughtful reader can avoid the conclusion, that more statesmanship and less partisanship is needed if Canada is to adequately measure up to her responsibility in this time of crisis and—testing:

The weakness of the Dominion Government is a cause of public anxiety. There is evidently something seriously wrong when the services of such men as Sir Thomas Tait and Mr. G. M. Murray cannot be retained. Even the most ingenious of apologists cannot in this case shift the responsibility to the Opposition. Partisanship was undoubtedly at work, but it was partisanship of the kind on which the Government depends for support. There was no attack from outside. The foes of the Government were of its own household.

The appointment of Sir Thomas Tait was regarded with approval and hope, and it was generally believed that in Mr. Murray he had made a wise choice. Certainly there was no hostile criticism from the political opponents of the Government. Yet, because of some pressure or interference from within, the appointment of Mr. Murray was blocked, and Sir Thomas Tait, anticipating further interference of the same kind, resigned. Practically the whole scheme with which he is connected falls through, and the Government is now groping about for a new plan.

This is not a matter of detail. It is failure of Government to fulfil its functions. It is an admission that the Government cannot co-operate with men who have no partisan object in view, but are able and willing to serve the country. It damps and discourages the enthusiasm of men who are competent to render that kind of service. It shows the Government as a combination which can neither do the work itself nor let anybody else do it.

This weakness is only emphasized by the constant yelping of the Government press at Sir Wilfrid Laurier. Such attacks are like the grumblings of a dyspeptic, who thinks all the world is wrong because his own stomach is out of order. The real source of the difficulty is that a great and important position has been treated like the little jobs and contracts which patronage committees hand out to supporters of the party.

No Government has ever had a freer hand than that which Sir Robert Borden is supposed to lead. Supplies have been voted without question, enormous powers have been vested in the Government. If its hands are tied, it is not by the obstruction of political opponents, but by its own weak surrender to elements which, in a time like this, ought to be disregarded or sternly suppressed. There is the narrowest kind of parochialism at a time when the broadest views ought to be taken. The wiser men of the party supporting the Government must be disquieted by its weakness. But more than that, the country is perplexed and anxious.

THE MAYORALTY.

The civic atmosphere in regard to the mayoralty situation is cleared somewhat in regard to the elimination of possible candidates in one case at least in the event of there being a contest, by a declaration of the Review, last night, in regard to the work of Mayor Duffus He deserves every word of the credit our contemporary has given him. The Examiner has the satisfaction of knowing its course in supporting the election of Mayor Duffus justified by his discharge of the duties of his important office. The Examiner has not felt called upon to explicitly praise or condemn him. His course has spoken for itself. The work of the Council has gone on smoothly, an indication that things were going well. A former principal of the Collegiate Institute used to tell enterprising reporters who approached him for news that he had no news for them—when everything was going well, he said, there was no news for the public. It was only when things went a little wrong that news developed. On the same principle the work of the Mayor has been of so generally satisfactory character that there was little "news," indicative of friction in the civic machinery.

In view of the excellent nature of Mayor Duffus' services the Review is justified in saying that "he has made an all-round record that will bear comparison with that of his predecessors in office." This being the case, it follows that Mayor Duffus has fully earned the benefit of the practice other mayors have had the benefit of—a practice that has for years accorded a mayor a second term in office. In this regard the Review is altogether in the right in saying:

If Mayor Duffus should decide to stand for another term, then by all the rules of fairness he is entitled to re-election by acclamation. This honour has been accorded mayors of Peterborough in the past, and none have ever been more deserving of it than the present incumbent. When a man passes through the furnace of a mayoralty campaign and emerges with honour, when there is no fault to be found with his official record, the least the citizens can do by way of expressing appreciation for his services is to accord him the courtesy of another term by unanimous consent.

The present is no time to disrupt the city by holding an election which could easily be avoided. When a man one year ago won over two opponents by a good margin, when there is every indication that in another contest he could repeat his success, why put the city to the trouble and expense of an election for the mayoralty?

If Mayor Duffus decides to retire, the gain will be his entirely, but the loss of his efficient service to the city will be a serious one when it is considered how few really capable business men aspire to municipal honours. If he drops out, the field from which to select a successor of equal efficiency and willing to work for nothing in public service, is certainly limited.

In municipal affairs, neither party politics nor any such consideration should count. Every public man should be judged by his record alone, every candidate for office sized up solely with regard to his fitness for the position he seeks.

NATIONAL CO-ORDINATION AS A CONDITION OF NATIONAL SUCCESS

Where the Germans really shine is not in science but in commercial and industrial organization and co-ordination; not to mention unscrupulousness. The British and Americans have some talent for business organization but none whatever for national co-ordination in business. The German nation, in time of peace, moves as one man to organize new industries and to develop the old ones. In this matter we are all at sixes and sevens. The separate German industries and financial institutions play into each other's hands under the authoritative co-ordination of the Imperial Government. With us it is every man and every industrial organization for himself or itself and the devil take the hindmost. Every man doeth what seemeth good in his own eyes, and his interest does not extend as a rule beyond the limits of the industries in which he is personally concerned. The system is the very reverse of the German system of co-ordination, it is the apotheosis of individual liberty and free competition in business. That our system is not destitute of merit may be gathered from the position which, under it, Great Britain and the United States have attained in the industrial and commercial world. But other factors have contributed to this success; Briton and the American make things to sell; the German makes things to sell; and selling is a branch of industrial organization not to be ignored. We should not be too proud to learn from the German. You can learn something even from a fool without being a fool, and you can learn a good deal from a knave without being a knave.

Co-ordination is the keynote of the present and the immediate future, and nobody but the governments of the various countries interested can make this a complete success. Private co-operation could do a great deal, our commercial organizations could do more, but the chances are that they will not move, until they get a little push and a little pull from the government. The leading business men of Germany are already getting ready for the economic war and are calling upon their Government to lead them as usual in the fight. They are trying to co-ordinate the financial, manufacturing and shipping businesses. The Hamburger Nachrichten says: "During the war and after the war our exporters will, to a great extent, have to take new roads." That is as true as preaching that Krupp shells have torn up most of Germany's old commercial highways the world over. "The organizations," continues our Hamburg contemporary, "have, however, been created, which both in the East and in South America are intended to do the preliminary labour. The German import trade has also created new organizations in the past few months, in order to be able to maintain its ground, and doubtless also as a preliminary object in order to be able to oppose vigorously the socializing efforts of certain political circles which want to lay the hand of the State upon certain articles of importation. In Hamburg, Bremen and Berlin unions of this kind have been created simultaneously. But not only the import and export trades have been organized. The whole German wholesale trade has recognized that a fighting organization is necessary."

This seems to suggest that there are fears of the State going too far in its co-ordination plans; and the development of huge State monopolies is almost a certainty. But it is impossible to withhold admiration for this strenuous effort in a rather desperate crisis to bring about preparedness for the perils of peace. It certainly is very German; it is open to that objection. We should de-Germanize it by making national co-ordination universal.—Montreal Herald and Telegraph.

ALL THE GIRLS WANTED TO MARRY SCHOOL PRODIGY

BOSTON, Mass., Oct. 19.—Harvard's "infant prodigy," William James Sidis, who has just ended a year as a teacher at the Rice Institution at Houston, Tex., and returned to Harvard to study law, declares that Texas girls are bold.

"It's terrible in Texas," he told a friend recently. "They want to naturalize you ,and the best way they can think of is to get you married to one of their girls. Gosh, it's fierce. The girls even proposed to me in public. It was awful, the newspaper got hold of it, and I had a dreadful time."

"How do you like the Texas girls?" some one asked.

"I don't," was his decisive reply. "They flirt too much. It was very annoying. But I am happy to say that article No. 13 of my constitution, which prohibits kissing or familiarity with girls is still unblemished."

Sidis was one of Harvard's most remarkable students. He entered the university when little more than a child and was graduated at the age students usually enter a high school.

ENLISTMENTS ARE FOR SERVICE OUT OF THE DOMINION

QUEBEC, Oct. 18.— In dismissing twelve writs of habeas corpus taken by parents of minors, who enlisted without her consent, Chief Justice Sir Francois Lemieux holds that a minor can only be relieved for cause of lesion alleged and proved and that enlistment with its usual consequences, drawbacks, etc., cannot cause a soldier what in legal practice is called lesion.

As for the contension advanced by Armand Lavrune, that enlistment is expeditionary forces to be sent outside Canada is null, the Chief Justice said:

"The Militia Act enacts that the Governor-in-Council may place the militia or any part thereof on active service anywhere in Canada and also beyond Canada, for the defence thereof, at any time when it appears advisable so to do by reason of emergency."

"On this particular point, it will not be amiss to repeat with the most noteworthy of our public men, among whom are authorities of some repute on constitutional law, that from the moment Great Britain is at war her colonies are equally at war. The fact that the Allies have captured all of Germany's colonies since the opening of hostilities is a striking case in point.

Canada's Defence Defined.

"In my humble opinion, the defence of Canada implies not only the power to safeguard the territory itself and the lives and property of Canadians; it further includes the faculty, recognised in International Law, to prevent, by all legitimate means, the invasion, ruin and crushing of the country in attacking the enemy in his own country, pursuing him everywhere, destroying his resources, giving him no rest until he be reduced to utter powerlessness.

"The very legitimate necessity of opposing the attack of the enemy in his own country or wherever he may seek refuge. It often is by taking the offensive, attacking and invading, that the defence of one's own country may be better attended to. It would indeed be impudent, if not utterly reckless, for a country at war to be content with a defensive strategy and to refrain from hostilities until the country were invaded and sacked."

Invaders Are Hurled Back

have four machine guns and made some prisoners.

"In the Alt Valley we repulsed an enemy attack on Mont Robul and made several prisoners. We also captured two machine guns.

"On the Jiul front calm has reigned. The enemy's artillery has violently bombarded the Oreova front."

Russians Have Arrived.

Telegraphing from the headquarters of General von Falkenhayn, commander of the Teuton forces in Transylvania, the correspondent of the Budapest Hirlap says that Russian troops are helping to defend the passes into Roumania.

The Budapest Az Est says the Austro-Hungarian intelligence service has detected the presence of formidable Russian forces at various points on the Roumanian and Hungarian frontier.

Falkenhayn's offensive in Transylvania has a very strong resemblance to Hindenburg's disastrous push in the Trentino, with this difference, that Falkenhayn has not only half as many troops at his disposal and has no such base as the formidable Trentino fortifications to fall back upon.

Thus the German bid for the Carpathian passes was summed up by a Roumanian diplomat, who added that the Roumanian General Staff had adopted all necessary measures for preventing the enemy's invasion of the country. Falkenhayn, said he, could not hope to invade Roumania with his present army. Any attempt of the kind would lead to disaster, because the enemy would find himself taken in a cul de sac by superior Russo-Roumanian forces.

Activity in Dobrudja.

Petrograd officially reports that in Dobrudja there has been an intermittent artillery duel and infantry activity.

The Bucharest War Office report reads:

"In Dobrudja an enemy seaplane was hit by our artillery fire and fell between the enemy lines and our own. The seaplane exploded during its fall and was burned."

Lakefield Boy Gives Thrilling Description of Battalion on Sept. 15th When Easte... Refinery.

Pte. J. Roy Robinson of the 21st Canadian Battalion, who was wounded on the 16th of September, has sent the following letter in part, to his parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. F. Robinson of Lakefield.

To my Dear Mother and all the rest:

Well mother while I am laying here, waiting for dinner I will scribble off a few lines to let you know I am doing fine, the very best that can be expected. You will remember that I told you before that when I was wounded my trousers and pockets were so badly torn that I lost all my money, so will you please send me an order for five dollars as soon as possible, as I can't draw any money while in the hospital and say if you have the casualty list that my name was in (or any other) send it along too, for I want to know how the rest of the boys made out. I don't know whether W. Robson is alright or not. The last I saw of him was a couple of hours before we attacked, when we said good-bye for we knew somebody would be sure to get it. In fact all [illegible] and that night something [illegible] another big bull pool, the members of which are talking $100 for the stock.

Organized opposition has developed to prevent adoption of re-capitalization plan for American Hide and Leather Company, which was announced last week. Opposing interests will probably form protective committee for preferred stock.

A prominent financial interest which goes deeply into analysis of the psychology of the speculative atmosphere says there is no doubt that the speculative spirit is thoroughly aroused and may be depended upon to be active for a long time in securities because of newly acquired wealth.

It is rumored that strong pool of insiders has been formed to advance Western Union to 100 on expectations of a higher dividend rate.

Submarine Boat stock is being bought by a speculative contingent, which fully expects to see it get large orders from the United States Government and European Governments for submarines from now on.

DUTCH SMUGGLERS EVADE GUARDS AND RUSH FOOD ACROSS BORDER TO HUNS

Washington Star.

The smuggling of food and fats, especially the latter, across the frontier from Holland into Germany has become so well organized and offers such prospects of quick money that mill and factory hands employed in establishments near the border desert by hundreds to join the ranks of the smugglers. The German talent for organization has made itself manifest in this phase of the great struggle, and the Dutch government, it is reported, has been forced to exert its utmost endeavors to suppress the traffic, according to reports from Holland.

Recent reports show that the Dutch government has appointed an additional thousand of special frontier police called "marechausees" besides a force of 2,000 already on the border, to aid the soldiers of the Dutch army in preventing the smuggling of contraband across into the hands of waiting German agents.

While the total amount of foodstuffs and fat that gets out of Holland by means of smuggling is possibly not sufficient in the course of a year to affect the duration of the war by as much as a fortnight, it is recognized that a single fortnight of battle means sacrifice of thousands of lives and expenditure of millions of money. Therefore the light-hearted manner in which hundreds of Hollanders go about smuggling contraband across the frontier of the little kingdom and the equally lighthearted way in which some of the soldiers and many government officials look on the proceeding do not at all accord with the views of the allies on the subject.

LIKE FOOTBALL GAME

A correspondent in Holland describes scenes in a certain village well-known as a nest of smugglers of particularly audacious methods.

A rush of smugglers across the frontier, he says, resembles the rushing of a Rugby foot ball game when the opposing team is well scattered, and the soldiers guarding the boundary have little chance of stopping the men carrying the coveted contraband into Germany.

On almost any day, the correspondent says, one may see considerable numbers of able bodied men, well dressed and not at all like vagabonds, lying about on the grass. Whatever conversation goes on is in low tones, usually the apparent loafers simply smoke or doze. Farther along one sees a factory being dismantled and torn down for removal to a distance from the border. This, he says, is because it has been found impossible to keep employees, because within a few days after arrival the new factory hands quit work and join the smugglers.

It is a typical Holland frontier village, the correspondent says, with a single long street of houses paralleling the line, which is perhaps 300 yards distant.

A little before sunset the groups of loafers get up and stroll innocently toward the street, disappearing behind the houses, while a deep peace broods for a while over the village.

Suddenly, however, from somewhere sounds a shrill whistle. After an interval the signal is repeated twice. Perhaps the signal is not a whistle; it may be some sort of inaudible sign, as smugglers' signals vary frequently. At any rate, from behind the houses dashes a group of men, often as many as 200 in one company. Each man bears a sack or bag on his shoulders. The group spreads fanwise and the men run for the border. Some of them, apparently by design, dash straight into the arms of the soldiers guarding the frontier.

HARD FOR THE GUARDS

What can the guards do? Even were they quick enough, they could hardly shoot more than a very few of the smugglers outnumbering the soldiers maybe as many as forty to one. A few shots do crack, and it may be one or two of the smugglers drop, usually shot in the legs. But out of the 200 as many as 100 get across the frontier safely, where the German state-organized receiving agents await the bags of contraband, especially fats, brought across. The smugglers disappear, and later dribble back to the home village by roundabout ways. Somewhere the profits of the venture are shared, and the wounded men, as well as any of the smugglers who may have been arrested, receive their proper share, with an additional sum as compensation for their hurts or their detention and punishment. Should any particular village become too warm, the smugglers abandon that place to take up the work elsewhere.

Many of the soldier guards, the correspondent says, have considerable [illegible].

HONOUR THRUST UPON HIM

Sir Sam Had No Knowledge of It Until He Was Congratulated.

OTTAWA, Oct. 18.—"I see the promotion is an honourary one," remarked the Minister of Militia yesterday, appropos of the cable announcing his creation as a lieutenant-general. "I presume," he added, "that that is the highest they could give. Sir Frederick Borden received an honourary major-generalship, and I believe that Premier Botha's lieutenant-Generalship is also honourary. As a matter of fact, I had not knowledge of the promotion until several of the British authorities congratulated me on it."

BOMBING REQUIRES COOL JUDGMENT AND IRON NERVES

Bombers really carry their lives in their hands. The Mills bomb, with its pineapple-like exterior, is a [illegible] weapon. To use it successfully against an enemy, and at the same time guard against mishape, requires special knowledge and training.

The British soldier takes naturally to bombing—that is, the offensive part of attacking, and hurling the [illegible]. At first, however, when we [illegible] a bombing school, he evinces considerable shyness of these little, waspish weapons of war. This shyness is prompted by ignorance, and quickly gives place to enthusiastic keenness when once he has learned how to manipulate the by no means intricate weapon.

It can easily be understood that from the nature of their work bombers run a considerable amount of daily risk before they are fitted to get on business terms with the enemy. Far behind the lines, and out of [illegible] of hostile shells, many incidents of heroic selfsacrifice are recorded.

What could be finer than the action of one young hero who flung himself on to a bomb which had fused prematurely in a crowded trench, thus saving the lives of his comrades while cheerfully yielding up his own?

The Mills bomb is fused by releasing a spring, after which it takes a certain number of seconds to explode. It would, therefore, obviously be useless to release the spring, and hurl it into the midst of an onrushing foe if it bursts some seconds later. To get the best results it is necessary to retain the bomb in the hand for as many seconds as will allow it to explode just as it reaches its objective. This, needless to say, requires cool judgment, practice and iron nerves.

* * * *

It is dawn. The air is damp with the white morning mist, through which the enemy's lines loom hazily from the British trench. Occasional rifle shots from either positions are the only sounds of life — and strife.

Suddenly, at a prearranged signal, forms creep out over the British parapet and down the sloping face. Then with bent bodies they move silently in an unending line towards the Hun trenches.

The attacking force gets to within a hundred yards of its objective before hoarse shouts, quickly followed by rifle and machine gun fire, proclaim it is discovered. Simultaneously the khaki line dashes forward. Men fall on all sides with such regularity that it appears as though they were ensuring some special drill. But the onrushing wave, gathering impetus every instant, rolls relentlessly forward.

The burst of Boche rifle fire increases in volume, then dwindles away as, with a cheer, the British surge into the trench. There is the confused swaying, staggering, and rushing of men using their bayonets in deadly work. The machine guns still chatter away in a sort of frantic frenzy. Then bombs burst at intervals down the line and coincidently the chatterings cease.

Even before the resistance of the garrison has been overcome the Germans from their support trench a hundred yards away open a heavy rifle and machine gun fire. To advance farther at present across the open would be impossible. It is now that the bombers real work begins, and groups of them immediately dash for the communication trenches which connect the captured position with that held by the enemy.

A big brawny man, evidently country-bred, heads one party. He is the "thrower," and at the first turning in the sunken traverse-protected track he halts for a moment to listen, then dashes on to the next corner. The thud of a falling bomb, luckily outside the trench, follows almost immediately by an explosion, warns him that the enemy are not far ahead. After a quick glance at the lie of the land through a periscope he takes a bomb from his apron and, snatching out the pin which releases the spring, poises the little weapon in his flung-back hand.

Then, as cooly and calculating as a slow, over-hand bowler, he swings his hand forward and releases the bomb. Snatching the periscope he is time to see the missile disappear into the trench, where it bursts on the instant.

"A bull's-eye!" he shouts as he dashes forward till he comes to the next corner, where a huddled grey-clothes form is evidence of his correct aim.

CHANNEL TUNNEL BEGUN.

England and France Will Be United By 22-Mile Tube.

LONDON, Oct. 19. — Some day a new generation of Englishmen will study the history of the world war and wonder how Britain carried on her share of the conflict without a tunnel under the English Channel. Work is proceeding on it to-day.

Since 1867, the proposition of running trains under the neck of water between Dover and Calais has been discussed by engineers, argued by economists and criticized by overcautious military men.

Just now arguments in favour of tunneling to Calais are appearing from every direction. France is willing to make every concession possible to hasten the work. Belgium and Italy have signified their willingness to participate in every way, financially and materially.

The English Tunnel Company, which controls the right to construct the tubes, is becoming active. The company is ready at any time to complete the work begun so many years ago. The capital already is subscribed and the initial boring well under way.

The Ministry of Agriculture and Commerce in Greece is considering the erection of agricultural schools for young Greek shepherds. The milk industry is one of the chief sources of wealth in the country.

MR. R. C. BRAUND'S HOUSE TO GET CONNECTIONS TO NEW TRUNK SEWER

The immediate use of the new trunk sewer on Park Street was practically promised to Mr. R. C. Braund by the Board of Works last night to provide sewer and drainage services to four houses he owns on Park street opposite the Baptist Church. Mr Braund stated that each of the four houses had been costing him $166.25 a year in taxes and other expenses and they were returning only seven dollars a month per house. Thus he was losing $962.25 a year on each of them. This was due to the fact that there was water in the cellars of two of them sufficient to prevent the use of furnaces. This situation could be relieved by connection with the sewer and the full value of the houses could be realised thereby.

Mr. Parsons stated that the new sewer would be connected to the old system at Rink street to-day, and there only remained to run a line of iron pipe out into the river at the foot of Lock street to complete the system until the sewage disposal plant has been erected. The City Engineer felt that this temporary outlet could be installed within a few weeks. This prospect pleased Mr. Braund who was satisfied to pay the $25 per house for the promised connections and the additional $25 deposit to cover the cost of the work.

IS THERE TO BE AN INCREASE IN LAUNDRY BILLS?

Rumour Has It That Some of the Laundries Must Anticipate Such a Move

About the only three things left that have not been subjected to advance in prices in this city is your telephone, your newspaper subscription and your laundry bill. If rumours count for anything it is expected that the telephone and the newspaper will be in the field by themselves shortly as some of the Laundrymen anticipate a small increase in prices owing to labour conditions and the enormous increase in the cost of some materials that laundrymen use.

An announcement will likely be made in a few days as to whether the rumour is based on facts or not.

Not a Candidate for Office ---Only His Way

Mr. John McCann, superintendent of the Street Railway, has suggested to some suspicious mortals that he is running for office and making himself solid by being extra obliging. In view of the pouring rain that was coming down in bucketsful at the noon hour, he put an extra Jackson Park car on and brought it down to George Street—personally conducted, and in so doing did a great kindness to many patrons who would have been otherwise put to inconvenience. Such an obliging attitude towards the public might suggest to the suspicious that he was seeking some public favour—was a candidate for some office. That is not the case; it's only his way.

TWO BREMENS CAPTURED THIRD NOW ON THE ATLANTIC

NEW YORK, Oct. 19.—The New York World says:

"From English sources of information which have always proved to be reliable the World has received the following:

"The first Bremen was captured in the straits of Dover as she was following the tactics of the Deutschland in steaming along under the wake of an English vessel to escape detection. She had been spied further out, and the net prepared to snare her. So completely was she entangled that it required two days to get out the crew, of which five were dead and the remainder in the last stages of exhaustion.

"The most important part of the capture was the package of valuable documents and mail matter, which overjoyed Britain to possess. She was taken to Chatham, but where she is now it was not stated.

"The British also captured the second Bremen but no details are given out. No attempt was made to capture the Deutschland on returning as it was not considered worth while to risk the boats to do so.

"A third Bremen is on her way and sailed expecting to dock in New London. She may be expected at any moment as she has not been captured. The U-53, when it was found she had not arrived, rushed out to sea to find and aid her. Her mission was to look up the Bremens. The Deutschland is coming out in November."

Public Meeting This Evening

This evening Mr. M. P. Fennell, Jr., Secretary of the British Sailors' Relief Fund, will visit Peterborough for the purpose of conferring with the Board of Trade, the Canadian Club, Daughters of the Empire, Local Council of Women and other local bodies with a view of organizing a committee to represent the fund in this city.

The fund was organized for the relief of disabled and wounded British Sailors of the Royal Navy and Mercantile Marine, and the widows and orphans of British sailors who have lost their lives in the performance of their duty since the war began.

SHORT TALKS ON MUSIC

J. M. Greene Music Co. Introduce Innovation at Their Daily Concerts

Phonograph concerts are no particular novelty, but the Greene Music Co., Charlotte Street, are introducing during Edison Week a new method of giving them. Each day a different programme is presented, varying from ragtime to grand opera arias. Thos. Buttars, who conducts these concerts, has arranged to give a brief descriptive talk about each piece of music before it is played. He says that while good wine needs no bush nevertheless he finds that the appreciation and interest of the audience are considerably enhanced when he tells them something of interest about each record before it is played.

Another interesting feature of the daily concerts this week is that those who attend them are asked to write their opinions of the music. Prizes are being offered for the best opinions.

Mr. Buttars has arranged with the Edison Laboratories at Orange, N.J., to send souvenir biographies of Thomas A. Edison to all who attend the Greene Music Co. concerts this week and take the trouble to leave their names with Thos. Buttars.

SHOE PRICES STIR RETAIL MERCHANTS

Shoes Worth $6 Before the War Are Now Up to $10 Costof Materials High

"We are selling more boots than in ordinary times, and the reason I think is that the work so many men are engaged in at the present moment is hard on footwear, and they must have it. Good wages are being paid, and of course the men are quite willing to pay the higher prices. They have to. I find that makers are asking as high as fifty per cent. more for the footwear at the factories, and even at the advanced prices delivories are hard to get." To a press representative in one of Ontario's manufacturing centres the above statement was made, and it bears out information furnished a week or two ago in our columns as to the high cost of manufacturing.

A St. John Merchant's View.

The St. John Telegraph quotes a merchant of that city as saying: "Shoe prices will be highest in the history of the country in a short time," he said, "and these prices will affect the man with the stated wage and the man with a family of children. The others, who have always paid $6 for their shoes, will not be at paying $8 and $9 now. I can show you that these conditions are not brought on by the war alone. The United States in 1906 had a population of 90,000,000 and had 101,000,000 head of cattle. To-day it has a population of 100,000,000 people and only 56,000,000 head of cattle. I had a letter a short time ago from a friend in Calgary. He used to have 1,200 head of stock. Now he has but twenty. He has turned 300 acres into wheat."

These were but a few of the reasons offered as being behind the foreguard of increasing prices. Sole leather that used to sell at twenty cents is now forty-eight cents. Upper leather has increased correspondingly.

The better class of men's boots are now selling around $10, and with the desire of the fair sex to follow the high-ankled styles, women's boots are costing even more.

More Cattle in Alberta.

Alberta's Minister of Agriculture will be inclined to take issue with the statement that may lead to the impression that there are fewer cattle in Alberta to-day than two years ago. Such is not the case. In the western Provinces the number of cattle is on the increase. It may be true that the head of cattle in the United States and elsewhere is less than formerly, but not so in the case of Canada. It is the opinion of traders in boot manufacturers' supplies that prices of raw material are moving up, and that the end of the war will not see an immediate drop in them. Wear and tear of the present time and the inroads being made into the supply of cattle must have the effect of making the raw material for leather scarcer than it has been.

New Home Treatment For Banishing Hairs

(Beauty Topics.)

With the aid of a delatone paste, it is an easy matter for any woman to remove every trace of hair or fuzz from face, neck and arms. Enough of the powdered delatone and water is mixed into a thick paste and spread on the hairy surface for about 2 minutes, then rubbed off and the skin washed. This completely removes the hair, but to avoid disappointment, get the delatone in an original package.

The Presbyterian Opponents Of Union Take a Strong Stand

One Speaker Charges That Church is a Tool in the Hands of Designing Men---Others as Strongly Oppose Church Union

TORONTO, Oct 18.—Between three and four hundred of those of the Presbyterian Church in Canada who vigorously oppose union with the Methodist and Congregationalists met at St. Andrew's Church King and Simcoe Sts., yesterday to commence what was termed a three-day convocation. There was a three-day convocation. There was soon evident ample enthusiasm. Mr. John Penman, Paris, Ont., presided after the sermon by the Rev. Rr. D. D. McLeod, Barrie, but Rev. Dr. Andrew Robertson, St. James's Square, Toronto, was elected to be President of the Convocation, with Rev. J. D. Cunningham, Welland, as Secretary. The following were appointed a Nominating and Business Committee to report this morning: Controller John McKeen, Halifax, N. S.; Rev. Dr. Fullerton, Charlottetown, P.E.I.; Professor D. A. Murray McGill University, Montreal; Rev. M. A. Campbell, Toronto; Dr. Thos. Eakin, Toronto; C. S. McDonald, Toronto, G. M. Macdonald, K. C., Kingston; Dr. J. K. Fraser, Galt; Rev. W. G. Brown, Red Deer, Alta.; Rev. Archibald Wishart, Calgary; Rev. Dr. Fraser, Vancouver (all nominated by the Chairman), and Rev. Peter Fisher, Davidson, was added.

DISCUSSION WITHOUT BITTERNESS.

In the three addresses which were given in the afternoon the wish was frequently expressed that the contentious matters should be dealt with without bitterness and with a due regard for the deep issues involved. There was evident also in the body of the church a determination to act in that spirit.

Dr. McLeod, in what he confessed was an address on the crisis rather than a set sermon, repeated the contention which is the background of the convocation movement, that the Church should be the guide, but held summate the proposed union until and unless it were accepted with practical unanimity. He agreed that the past history of the Presbyterian Church should go the guide, but held that ignoring the past had led often to errors. The creed of a people so largely determined its character that he urged further consideration. Their religion was not emotional, but shone in loyalty to conscience and obedience to duty. No adequate reasons had been given by their opponents for suggesting union. Not less than 100,000 members had no sympathy with the proposed change. A large part had dissolved to continue the Presbyterian Church in Canada. Only opinions and prophecies had so far been possible, as no such new Church as was proposed had been tried. Presbyterian names would be retained in the new Church, but they would have new meanings. To answer this it would have to be assumed that Methodists and Congregationalists had been Presbyterians all along, but did not know it. (Laughter.) Only the missionaries, professors and Principals of colleges would not have the opportunity of annual change. Dr. McLeod held that the duty of the church at present was to continue in her place, steadfastly and unmoved. Her second duty was to look forward with clear vision to the future. They who desire to continue were charged with "traditionalism." If that meant, as in the army and navy, living up to the highest of traditions, then he accepted the epithet. They were not commanded to love their neighbor better than themselves, nor need they move into his house to show love.

URGES A FAIR FIGHT

There would be no effort he claimed, to pack the courts of the Church; no refusal to distribute the literature of opponents; no concealment of acts from the people. Dr. McLeod also argued that there was little in the statements that there was overlapping and that economy could be better devised than in the way the unionists showed. Finally, the Church was so deeply rooted in the land that a serious national blow would be struck if it were ended. They therefore proposed to continue.

DR. CAMPBELL'S PROTEST.

After the election of the President and the close of a short preliminary business session, at which the Assembly resolved itself into a body for the defence of the Presbyterian Church with a name to be decided to-day, Rev. Robert Campbell, D.D., Montreal, gave an address on the "Policy of the Church". He read the lengthy protest submitted twice to General Assemblies, but which the Moderators refused to allow to be read.

Going on Dr. Campbell said:

"Our constitution, which has been violated by the majority of the last General Assembly, is our last line of defence, and it is impregnable. But waiving that fundamental point, we are not afraid to join battle with our friends on the other side, even on their chosen ground. The step taken at the last General Assembly has not gone so far as to make a final breach inevitable." The resolution for union he argued, really effected nothing, as it merely sought to commit the Church to a course of action at a future uncertain time.

UNIONIST LEADERS DISTURBED

"The unionist leaders," declared Dr. Campbell, "are manifestly perturbed by the growing opposition to the platform they had laid down for the Church as a whole."

FIGHT FOR THE BASIS.

Dealing with what he called the fight for the basis," Dr. Campbell continued: "What can be the meaning of the annotations upon that document communicated to sessions by the learned President of the University of Toronto? That communication displays manifest nervousness and is somewhat of an abject apology for some of the features of the new constitution which are evidently complained of in certain quarters. So far from dissensions being choked off by the recent Assemblies' deliverances, it has become more animated, and President Falconer, himself is called upon to enter the arena. By putting his "ear to the ground" he has discovered that there is a strong tide of sentiment set in against the union movement, and that the whole scheme is in danger. How otherwise can be explain the action of sending, without instruction or authority by even the General Assembly which appointed him Convener of the new committee to the Secretaries of Sessions annotations on certain portions of the Basis of Union which he himself must have felt needed apology or defence?

"A PITIABLE PLEA."

"And what a pitiable plea he makes. Instead of standing up for the principle of the Basis of Union as applicable and commendable to all as the improvement upon present conditions which is claimed for the basis, he informs local sessions, that they need not conform to anything in the basis which is disagreeable or inconvenient for them. Is this ingenuous? The assurance given to sessions and congregations that there need be no change in administration which will affect them is surely an apology for something which cannot be defended on its merits. And then it is overlooked that there is no permanency in the present relations. Changes may take place, nay, must take place, on the morrow of union, when uniformity of procedure alone would secure the peaceful working of the Church's regulations. Now we know where we are. The secret is out. The heads of two Provincial universities have placed themselves also at the head of this movement and the head of one of the theological colleges has placed himself alongside of them. And so the Church of the future is to be an appendage of these universities and this college. Let the Provincial Governments take note of this. Presently we shall have the universities dictating policies to the Governments rather than the Governments to the universities. Let our Church also beware in time that it becomes not a tool in the hands of designing men supported by backstairs influences of certain chambers that need not be located."

CHURCH SHOULD STAND PAT

Dr. Campbell's main argument was that the Church should stand pat where it was, and not give way to panic.

CHURCHES CLOSED TO ANTIS

The evening session was chiefly given over to the reading of two papers, and only incidentally did real live, red-hot matter come to the front. In asking members present to leave their names and addresses with the Reception Committee, Rev. J. R. M. Glassford remarked: "We want to know you: we could not reach you before. The churches have been closed to us." Thereupon the Chairman, Rev. Andrew Robertson, Toronto, added: "I have a letter from one member of a congregation where forty to forty-five voted against union. The names of the others are kept a secret by the church. It is the kind of treatment we are finding. We cannot get into touch with our friends because of this."

The first paper of the evening was prepared by the Hon. J. C. Brown, New Westminster, B. C., on "The Contribution of the Presbyterian Church by its policy and doctrine to the rights of the people and civil government. In the absence of Hon. Mr. Brown the paper was read by the Rev. F. G. Thompson, New Westminster. It was interestingly composed of historic proof that the Presbyterian Church, especially the Calvinistic element and the Puritanical, had bred men of high character in private and public life. It had throughout the 16th and 17th centuries been on the side of the people and democracy in England, Scotland, Holland and France. There was nothing contentious in the paper, though its length was perhaps well summed up in the wish of the Chairman at the close that Horace Walpole's characteristic description of the American rebellion as "Cousin America has run away with the Presbyterian parson" might have come sooner.

PUNGENT PAPER FROM COOKSTOWN

A paper which had been announced from Rev. Robert Johnston, Halifax, N. S. could not be given, as Captain Johnstan has just put on khaki and could not be present. At short notice Rev. W. G. Hanna, Cookstown, had prepared a most pungent paper, also largely historic, but bristling with smart phrases. He, too, largely argued that the Presbyterian Church had bred the cream of men.

"Should the day ever come in Canada," he said in one passage, "when Nationalism may precipitate civil war which God forbid, when the cancer of Mormonism might enter or western willfulness threaten the disruption of the commonwealth, the Presbyterian Church furnishes the alternative in a full-orbed Christian character and the cure allied to the depraved hearts of men.

"Conditions in Canada after the war cannot be the same. In addition to a heterogeneous immigration we are sure our present problems will take new phases, some fraught with grave peril to the national life. These conditions cannot be cured for by a shilling formalism, nor vaporing emotionalism, not philosophic joy, nor Socialistic panacea, nor will the situation be met adequately by a Church with a spineless form of doctrine couched in the nebulous terms of a compromise—a form which no one is required to observe or defend as a teacher once he is invested with that function." (Applause.)

BRIDEGROOM'S HIGHER CRITICISM

He compared the action of the unionists to that of a bridegroom who applied for "higher criticism" to the marriage service by discovering that he could substitute "k" for "v" in the words "as long as you both shall live," making it "as long as you both shall like."

PTE. ROY ROBINSON TELLS HOW HE WAS WOUNDED IN CHARGE

Lakefield Boy Gives Thrilling Description of the Advance of the 21st Battalion on Sept. 15th When Eastern Ontario Unit Captured Sugar Refinery.

Pte. J. Roy Robinson of the 21st Canadian Battalion, who was wounded on the 15th of September, has sent the following letter in part, to his parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. P. Robinson of Lakefield.

To my Dear Mother and all the rest:

Well mother while I am laying here, waiting for dinner I will scribble off a few lines to let you know I am doing fine, the very best that can be expected. You will remember that I told you before that when I was wounded my trousers and pockets were so badly torn that I lost all my money, so will you please send me an order for five dollars as soon as possible, as I can't draw any money while in the hospital, and say if you have the casualty list that my name was in (or any other) send it along too, for I want to know how the rest of the boys made out. I don't know whether W. Robson is alright or not. The last I saw of him was a couple of hours before we attacked, when we said good-bye for we knew somebody would be sure to get it. In fact all the day before and that night something seemed to tell me I was going to get it but whether or not I would be put out of action altogether, I didn't know (but I didn't say so to anybody). It was good day light 6 a.m. when we attacked and our object was a sugar refinery and a little village "Marselette or some such a name about 1,200 yards ahead. We had taken the first line quite easily and when I got mine, was between four or five hundred yards beyond it. The sergeant-major and I were quite near each other at the time and I noticed that our boys had got a little separated from the 20th Battalion, who were on our right, and quite a number of Huns were beating it for the rear of our lines without any trouble, so when I got near enough to shout to him above the din; I showed him the gap and asked him if we hand not better go over and he answered "Yes," and with that I turned and started over and he followed.

We got a little out of wind and I was just going to drop into a shell hole, when everything went a blank. When I came to I heard him say, "Roy, I'm hit!" I knew that I was hit and I saw my little finger hanging by a little bit of skin, but it didn't hurt. The sergeant major got up; he was bleeding at the head, and he started for the rear of our lines. I was going to follow him when I noticed somebody lying dead. I was lucky to be alive. The whiz-bang had hit my rifle, and it was all in splinters. I recognized it by the sling. I started for an advanced dressing station at the rear of our lines (though I never expected to get there) and when I got there I collapsed.

From then on for the next two or three days I did not know very much, but as present there isn't much goes on around me that I don't know except when I sleep, and the night Sister says I talk in my sleep. Well, there's more than me, for last night I heard a fellow say "No, don't buy pickles!" Ha, ha. It was exactly a year to the very day from I landed in France that I was wounded.

Am feeling better every day and hope all are well. Love to all.

BOY.

LIEUT. M'KENZIE ELECTED IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Soldier's Votes Make Some Change in the Recent B.C. Elections

VICTORIA, B.C., Oct. 17. — The official count of soldiers' votes cast in Canada began here this morning. The only change definitely made was that in Delta riding Lieutenant F. J. MacKenzie, Conservative, will have a substantial majority over A. D. Paterson, who was elected by a majority of six on the civilian vote. The vote is now: MacKenzie, 909; Paterson, 870.

The effect of the count in Alberni, Victoria, Esquimault, Comox, The Islands, Dewdney, Kamloops and Cowichan is to leave the net result as it was before. In Dewdney, John Olicer, Liberal, lost somewhat, but has still a majority of 140, and a only 104 soldiers from this constituency voted in England he is safe. In Comox, Michael Manson gained but four on Hugh Stewart, and will have to do much better in England if he expects to defat the Liberal member-elect.

It is quite possible that Hon. W. R. Ross is beaten in Fort George on the soldiers vote. Of forty-eight votes counted here he got twelve, as against twenty-five for John McInnis and five for Gillette. In the old country there are 170 voted to be counted.

CAN'T WRITE UNLESS KNOWN.

Correspondence With 'Lonely' Soldiers has been Prohibited.

LONDON, Oct. 19.—Letters still come by the bushel from Canada and elsewhere to the Canadian Red Cross and similar institutions, the writers asking if they may correspond with some lonely soldier. Such letters are not now allowed to be forwarded to an soldiers. Further, the Red Cross and like institutions are forbidden to put soldiers into communication with unknown correspondents. One letter received in Lady Drummond's office to-day from Canada stipulated that it should be sent to some soldier "who must be good looking."

It has been incorrectly stated that Canadian soldiers are not allowed to draw pay in English hospitals. The regulations are precisely the same on this point as in Canada, soldiers being allowed to draw up to two pounds monthly, in addition to sending money to friends.

Combles Cost Only 5,250

NEW YORK, Oct. 19.—Lieutenant Stephane Lauzanne, former editor of the Paris Matin, arrived on the Lafayette, on a mission for the French Foreign Office. He was with his regiment, the Thirty-first Infantry, in the beginning of the fighting at Verdun, and was then detailed to the Foreign Office at Paris, and sent to Switzerland.

"The Allies are gaining more and more each day," Mr. Lauzanne continued, "as they become acquainted with the war. This applies to the British as well as the French, and is demonstrated by the decrease in the number of killed and wounded in each big engagement. On Sept. 22, when Combles was captured, the French loss in men killed and wounded was 5,250 only, for the two days' fighting, while in the Champagne, a year previous, it was over 50,000.

"The winning of the war to-day depends on the number of guns and ammunition, and as time goes on the Allies will attack on a larger scale. The British losses have been much less, now that they have big artillery to clear the ground before the infantry advance."

Mr Lauzanne went on to say that the symbol of the British was patience. They are always quietly trying out some new invention that will help to bring victory to the Allies.

HONOUR THRUST UPON HIM

Sir Sam Had No Knowledge of It Until He Was Congratulated.

OTTAWA, Oct. 19.—"I see the promotion is an honourary one," remarked the Minister of Militia yesterday, appropos of the cable announcing his creation as a lieutenant-general. "I presume," he added, "that that is the highest they could give. Sir Frederick Borden received an honourary major-generalship, and I believe that Premier Botha's lieutenant-Generalship is also honourary. As a matter of fact, I had not knowledge of the promotion until several of the British authorities congratulated me on it."

The Aldermen, by the way, were "wise" to the Street Commissioner's annual deer shooting expedition, and Ald. Saunders intimated that he wouldn't refuse a saddle of venison or even a few juicy steaks.

only canvas protection, one acquainted with camp life knows that in wet weather there is a dampness in the air that breeds rheumatism and kindred sickness. A great percentage of this could be stopped and a vast improvement in comfort brought about if permanent drying rooms or recreation rooms would be built.

This year each soldier's pay was $1 to pay for the huge canvas which formed the recreation and dining tent. Again, the soldiers had to pay for tent floors, which is manifestly unfair.

Believing that the department can greatly improve matters, Col. Mills has been asked to make a report based on his experience as inspector of accounts, which brings him into each training camp.

"Major" the famous military dog, who has been a part of the military life of the R.C.H.A. the 21st battalion, 36th battalion, 59th battalion and the 156th battalion, was fairly wild when he saw the troops entrained on Saturday, and the poor dog would look into the face of every soldier and beg to be taken on board the train. "Major" went to England with the 21st battalion, was shipped back to Montreal, and last summer tramped from Montreal to Barriefield camp. He came here with the 156th after the 59th went overseas, and it was pathetic in the extreme to watch the conduct of the dog as the men and officers of the battalion entrained on Saturday night. Nothing was seen of "Major" in camp all day Sunday and yesterday, but last night he turned up on Princess street, wagging his tail at every soldier he met on the street. What unit "Major" will now attach himself to is hard to determine but he will be with some part of the military life of the city for the winter. He is a soldier's dog, and loves the uniform better than he loves a bone.

The total recruits for the past two weeks throughout this district numbered 276. Appointed officers, 267, attached officers, 71; other ranks, 5,623; total force in the district of all ranks, 8,961. The Divisional signal company secured the largest number of recruits followed closely by the 240th battalion of Renfrew. The 207th of Ottawa has shown the most rapid growth.

Struck By Flying Emery Wheel

Mr. Robt. Mein of the Fitzgerald Carriage Co. Sustained a Scalp Wound

Mr. Robert Mein of the Fitzgerald and Company factory, corner of Brock and Water streets, narrowly escaped serious injury this morning when he was struck over the heart and eye with a piece of flying emery wheel which had burst while revolving at a speed of twelve hundred revolutions a minute. As it was Mr. Mein sustained a severe cut over the left eye. The accident took place about 10 o'clock this morning. The injured man was sharpening a chisel when the emery wheel, which was a brand new one, with metallic reinforcement, broke in several pieces. A triangular piece, weighing about a pound, struck Mr. Mein over the heart, glanced off and hit him over the left eye, inflicting a severe scalp wound.

Doctors Carmichael and Eastwood were summoned and the injured man removed to his home, 538 Harvey street.

Cars of Flour at $5 Yet Puts Bread at 8c.

CHATHAM, Oct. 18. — Charging that there was an illegal combination in an effort to increase the price of bread in Chatham, and also that a flour mill had endeavoured to coerce a local baker by refusing to ship flour now on order unless the local man would increase his bread price, Ald. B. L. Bedford introduced a resolution, which was adopted by the City Council, calling for an investigation. He claimed one local baker who has raised his bread price to eight cents per loaf has an order at a price of $5 per Barrel several carloads of flour, but is giving the increase in flour price as the cause for the bread increase.

The Council also adopted a resolution appointing a committee of the Council to investigate the general advance in cost of living and report to Council.

Another resolution calls upon the Legislature to grant municipalities the right to raise funds to operate municipal stores or manufacturing plants in an effort to keep living costs down.

When Danny Simons Comes to Town

Danny Simons, of whom in artistic as well as personal capacity, his fellow citizens are proud, is going to give them a "Christmas box" on December 18th, when he will appear in the Opera House, here, in a comedy that will give him a chance to show what he can do, and that he is worthy of being kept before the footlights when so many good actors are crowded out by the "movies." In this connection a letter from Mr. Croyland Yokome of the Vancouver Province, to a friend in town, is of interest to "Danny's" many friends. He writes: "I see by the New York Clipper that Dan Simons is with Gus Hill's musical comedy "Bringing up Father," founded on Geo. McManus' cartoons. If he comes this way I shall have to look him up and give him another "write-up." "Dan" has made good on the stage all right, and is working all the time. That says a great deal when "movies" have interefered so seriously with the legitimate stage." When Dan comes to town we shall have a chance to see that this is true.

Local Pastors Are Attending

the fact that, while this might be the immediate cause, the real cause of causes lay farther back in the materialistic temper of the modern world order.

Blessings of Church Union.

"The first characteristic is unity. Only a united Church can hope to Christianise the world. The divided state of Christendom, whatever the cause, is a great weakness. It is a weakness at home, it is a stumbling block abroad. It not only leads to overlapping, duplication, rivalry and ill-will, but weakens tremendously the influence of the Church on public opinion. Rev. J. H. Shakespeare, Secretary of the Baptist Union of Great Britain and Ireland, in his annual address as President of the Free Church Council sat Bradford in March last, boldly affirms: 'We can never make our full impact upon the life of the nation while we are split up into sections.'

"In the presence of a great world-crisis what is the watchword of the Master whom we love and in whose presence we are gathered here to-night? Methinks it is one word — Evangelise. In the presence of the failure of merely human devices for the redemption of humanity, and amidst the convulsions of a great world war with its ghastly carnage and its harvest of sorrow, suffering and shame the witchhood of the Master—Evangelise— is again sounding in the ears of the Church."

German Baptists Pro-Ally.

Rev. E. Wiesie New Hamburg, in leading the discussion said he admired the courage of the convention in asking one who was a German to lead the discussion. He wanted to assure the convention that the German people in the German Baptist Churches were not pro-German. "We are heart and soul with you, although we have deep down a little German sympathy, which we cannot erase.

Takes Issue With Mr. Strachan.

Rev. John Galt, Peterborough "squarely and honestly disagreed" with the reader of the paper. It was not the work of the Church to reconstruct everything. Unless the whole Christian Church has been wrong all through the ages, the epistles were the true interpretation of Christ's teaching.

Rev. Bengall Brown, Rev. J. R. Webb and Rev. John Galt, of Peterborough and district, are attending the convention.

MONEY FOR THE PATRIOTIC FUND

Meeting Was Held Last Evening in the Office of Mr. F. H. Dobbin

A committee representing the Patriotic Fund met last evening in the office of Mr. F. H. Dobbin and discussed ways and means of raising a sufficient amount of money to carry the work on for another year. The debenture plan of raising the money was given favourable consideration. The committee will make a report and submit it at a meeting to be held at a later date.

MAYOR WILL VISIT LINDSAY

LINDSAY, Oct. 19.—Mayor R. Kylie has made the announcement that a deputation comprising the Mayors of Belleville, Cobourg, Peterborough, Oshawa and Port Hope will arrive in Lindsay to-day. The object of their coming is for the purpose of looking over Lindsay's many stretches of asphalt pavement that have been put down. While here the Chief Magistrates may discuss privately matters of import to this and other Canadian towns.

The deputation will be met at the G.T.R. station by the members of the Town Council and conveyed by automobile through the different wards. On the winding up of business they will have six o'clock dinner at the Hotel Benson.

Mayor Duffus left Peterborough at noon and will return to Peterborough in time for the public meeting to be held this evening.

LIQUOR MUST NOT BE KEPT IN SHOP

Magistrate Dumble Interprets the Word "Shop" in the Meaning of Temperance Act

Magistrate Dumble's judgment in the case of Inspector Stewart vs. J. V. Calderone is printed as follows for the guidance of others to whom the Temperance Act may at any time apply:

This was a charge by the License Inspector for viplation of section 41 of the Ontario Temperance Act, for keeping liquor in a place not a private dwelling house in which defendant resided without having the required license.

The defendant was an Italian keeping in two adjoining shops two distinct businesses, in one a boot and shoe mending shop, in the other a fruit shop. Back of the shoe shop there was a small bedroom with bed and bedding; this opened into the shoe shop but not into the fruit shop. Back of the fruit shop and opening into it was a store room in which defendant kept surplus fruit till fit to bring into the front shop. There was a door opening from this store room into the front shop and a door to the back yard.

The defendant had in this store room a cupboard and table, and a gas stove, and the shop girl said she had served bread and meat and olive oil there and had seen defendant eat in it. Defendant had no other dwelling place, lodging or domicile.

The defendant's contention was that he was at liberty to have in this store room (his counsel called it his kitchen) such liquor as he needed.

Defendant did not go into the witness box.

Was the store room or so called kitchen "A private dwelling house" within the meaning of the Statute.

Defendant did not sleep there, but in the rear of the shoe shop which was a distinctly separate building, completely separated with separate cellar and partitions without doors between, and each shop had distinct street numbers.

The liquor was found in the store room in the cupboard with many empty bottles and flasks.

A fruit store is a place open to the public and it is not the intention of the Act that frequenters of the shop should be facilitated in getting liquor. How easy for customers to step back into the store room and get a glass of liquor, if such were allowed. Every grocery and fruit store could supply customers and detection would be very difficult.

I must hold that this liquor in question was not kept in a "private house," but in defendant's shop, and that he is liable under the Statute, and I adjudge that he do pay a fine of $200.00 and $9.85 costs to be paid forthwith and in default of payment that he be imprisoned in the County Jail for a period of four months.

Telephone Courtesy is Growing in Favor.

Newspapers and periodicals, which reflect so well the trend of public opinion, are continually urging the practice of telephone courtesy.

Progressive merchants are studying its relation to their sales. Employees are being trained to treat telephone callers with the same degree of courtesy and consideration that obtains in a face-to-face conversation.

And the result for those who practice telephone courtesy faithfully is a constantly growing volume of telephone trade and good-will.

The encouragement you give to your employees in developing pleasing telephone manners will bear fruit in the promotion of good-will amongst your customers.

Bonaccord street, from Park street to the G.T.R.

Dublin street, from Park street easterly 278 feet.

Antrim street, a distance of 180 feet from the end of the present main.

City Engineer Parsons recommended that the request be granted and the Board passed it.

Poles on These Streets.

Mayor Duffus moved, seconded by Ald. Saunders, that the Utilities Commission be permitted to erect poles on the following streets: Five on Brock, three on Sheridan, four on College, two on Manning avenue, six on Park street.

Sampson Called Police Station By Long Distance

While County Constable Moore was discussing with Constable Hemmings, several of the local police and detectives yesterday the probable whereabouts of Clarence Sampson, who is wanted in the Warsaw cattle-stealing case, a long distance call came to Mr. G. N. Gordon, and a Sampson was on the other end. Mr Gordon of course, "stalled" around to avoid disclosing the subject and object of his conversation. "I can't talk to you now," he said, but quickly passed from the police station to the city clerk's office, where there were no police ears within hearing. Sampson wanted to know what the situation in Peterborough was, and Mr. Gordon replied that he had been engaged by Davis Hill and Mrs. Clarence Sampson, who were held on a charge of cattle stealing. Mrs. Sampson by the way, was refused bail and is confined to the gaol with her six months' old baby. Mr. Gordon said he wasn't certain whether he was talking to Clarence Sampson or his father, but the call was a decidedly suggestive one.

STORM WARNINGS HAVE BEEN POSTED

Big Storm is Heading North-East Says Washington Bureau

Examiner Special:

WASHINGTON, Oct. 19.—The weather Bureau to-day posted storm warnings as rapidly as possible around the lakes region and Atlantic coast. The gulf storm of yesterday now centres in Indiania, moving north-eastward with less violence, but this will increase the bureau predictions. Snow was reported as far south as Kansas. Wyoming reported eight degrees above zero.

WILL BEGIN WORK ON ROMAINE ST. SEWER

The disposition of the sewer gangs for the rest of the working season, a proper subject for the attention of the City Engineer, received far more concern from the Board of Works last night than it apparently deserved. Mr. Parsons stated that Mr. Thirnbeck's gang on the Park street sewer would be finished this week, and that the Romaine street sewer could be commenced. Ald. McIntyre wanted the Parnell street gang, under Martin Nearly, to be transferred to that work when they had finished, although there remains about three or four weeks' work there. Mr. Parsons will need the Thirnbeck hand to put in the outlet of the new sewer at the foot of Lock street.

Ald. Duncan finally moved, seconded by Ald. Saunders, that the Park street gang be turned loose on Romaine street, and that Mr. Neary's trench diggers be sent to Chamberlen, Brock and Wolfe streets when they have finished on Parnell.

The walk P. O'Toole asked for on Centre street to Caddy street will cost $35 Mr. Parsons informed the Board.

Cotton mills in Georgia and the Carolinas will knit a million pairs of socks for the War Department. The entire contract is worth $100,000.

Antis To Fight To the End

Special to Examiner:

TORONTO, Oct. 19.—After adopting the name of "Presbyterian Church Association," the anti-Unionists in session at St. Andrew's church to-day took a solemn vow and covenant to maintain their fight against union by all means in their power. They supplemented this in a practical way by providing for a paid travelling Secretary to assist the President and Vice President. The presentation and unanimous endorsation of an anti-union resolution was a very solemn occasion.

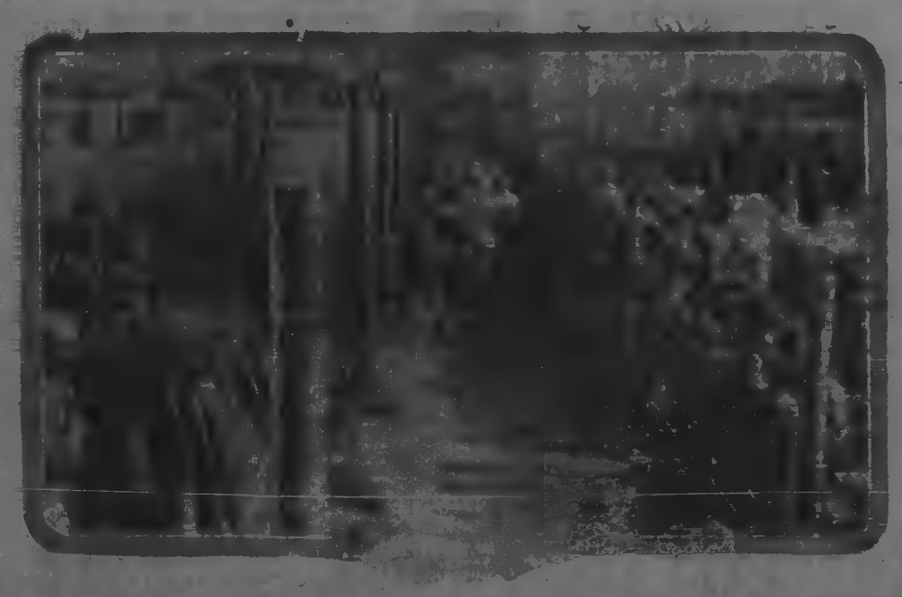
ST. PETER'S LADIES' LITERARY SOCIETY

St. Peter's Ladies' Literary Society will hold their first meeting on Friday evening, October 20th, in St. Alphonsus' Lyceum at 8.15. Mr. C. W. Stinson, a returned hero of Langemarck, will give an interesting talk on the war. Excellent talent has been procured for the musical part of the programme, and a very enjoyable evening is promised. All the members are cordially invited to be present.

Death Occurred Under Anaesthetic

Arthur Florence, the ten-year-old son of Mr. D. Florence, 267 Simcoe street, passed away in Nicholls Hospital this morning while under an anesthetic. Preparations were being made for an operation for an internal disorder when those who were in attendance observed a weakening of the heart action. Means were immediately adopted to restore the heart action to a normal condition and as a last resort the pulmotor was sent for. The boy revived twice under the influence of the pulmotor but all efforts to restore the patient were unavailing.

The remains will be forwarded to Toronto this afternoon where interment will take place.



GERMANS IN PRISON CAMPS IN ENGLAND—Most war pictures showing prison camps come from Germany because France does not give much information regarding her prisoners, and until recently Britain has not had many. Here is a scene in one of the new great prison camps in England. The men are kept in barbed-wire enclosures by day and sleep in tents.

TWO HAVELOCK BOYS KILLED AT THE FRONT

Another Boy Reported Wounded---Havelock Woman Succumbed to an Attack of Typhoid Fever---School Report---Items of Interest.

HAVELOCK, Oct. 18.—News was received last week of the death at the front of Pte. Eddie Jones, eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Jones, of town, who enlisted over a year ago.

Pte. Clifford Easton, son of Mr. Chas. Easton, of Belmont, but formerly of town, was also killed in action, who also enlisted during the early part of the war.

Both these brave young lads are still in their teens. They were well known in town, having lived here since childhood, and the news of their death has cast a gloom over the village and vicinity. This is the first of the Havelock boy residents to have been killed. The heartfelt sympathy of the citizens as a whole goes out to the bereaved and sorrow-stricken parents and friends.

Pte. Cuthbertson, another of Havelock's young boys, has been reported wounded, but his many friends hope that his wounds will not be of a too serious a nature and he be soon restored to health again.

The death occurred on Monday morning, Oct. 16th, of Mr. Henry Williams, of town, aged 35 years, after an illness of typhoid fever of only one week's duration. He leaves a wife and three small children, two boys and a girl, to mourn his untimely loss, and who have the heartfelt sympathy of the whole community.

The funeral took place Tuesday at 1 o'clock p.m., services being held at their residence, King street, and were conducted by Rev. Chas. Adams of the Methodist church, of which deceased was a member and from thence to the Maple Grove cemetery for burial.

Miss Gladys Davidson of Campbellford, spent a few days in town last week, the guest of Miss Bertha Bryans.

Capt John Dyer of Camp Borden, was a recent visitor to town.

BREATHING FAD IS OPPOSED

Lungs Self-Regulating When Air is Pure, Says Physician.

A widely-known physician remarks that there is nearly as much nonsense in the "deep breathing fad" as there is in food fads. Deep breathing really is beneficial, but not in the way most persons suppose.

The common notion, inculcated by opponents of the big chest and "red blood" gospel, is that the more air you "take into your lungs, the more oxygen you get into the blood, thus by giving the blood a healthier and richer and increasing the health of the whole physical organism. The function of the lungs, of course, is to "burn up the impurities in the blood, and oxygen is the chemical agent in that process. The theorists argue that as carbonic-acid gas "fills the lungs," says this physician, "common in the assumption that the lungs can be made to do more work.

As a matter of fact, he says, the lungs do their own chemical regulating, and use only as much oxygen as they see fit, regardless of what their owner may do. "One cannot increase the amount of oxygen in the blood or decrease the amount of carbonic acid one bit by deep breathing." The lungs always contain more oxygen than they can use, even in the shallowest breathing—provided, of course, the air is sufficiently pure. The chief advantage in deep breathing is to help the circulation.

Second Fire in Park St. Terrace Queer To Chief

Some One, He Believes, Set Fire to Shingles Piled Against Shed—May Make An Arrest

EARLY MORNING BLAZE

A second fire that is believed to have been of incendiary origin, was discovered about 2.30 o'clock this morning by the family of Mr. I. Magee, 247 Park Street, when it had already made considerable progress at the rear of the house. This is located in the terrace on the west side of Park Street, between Sherbrooke and Bolivar streets, and is two doors south of the dwelling which was scorched a short time ago, and was later investigated by Chief Howard.

In the repairs to this building, the shingles and other scrap wood were given to Mr. Magee, who had them piled against his shed and on a landing nearby. Last night there was no fire in their house, for the chimney and pipes had been cleaned and the fire was not relighted. It is practically certain that the pile of shingles was set ablaze. The kitchen and a twenty square feet patch of the roof of the terrace were burned, with about $200 damage to the building and $150 to the contents.

Sergt. Kidd and P. C. Dickson passed along Park Street at 2 o'clock and there were no signs of a fire then. Chief Howard stated that there were grounds for suspecting a certain individual and that an arrest might be made in a short time.

Harold Clarke of Port Hope supported the groom. The bride's going-away suit was of black silk poplin. Mr. and Mrs. Christie will make their home in Port Hope.

PETERBORO'S STREET CLEANING MACHINE ATTRACTS ATTENTION

Has Been Perfected in Local Factory and United States Experts Are Coming to Examine It—Contract For Cleaning Local Streets.

Commencing on Monday the Dominion Industrial Sweepers Limited will clean the city's paved streets for the balance of the year for $200, the city providing a man to sweep the gutters. This arrangement was completed by the Board of Works last night after negotiating with Mr. W. H. Hamilton, one of the directors of the local company manufacturing motor street cleaners, and Mr. Blane, the inventor of the machine.

The work already performed incidental to the experiments with the machine was worth about $1,500 to the city. Mr. Hamilton estimated, and this had been enjoyed by the city without any cost. Now the machine has reached a state of perfection that will enable it to accept the entire responsibility of cleaning the paved streets, and Mr. Hamilton asked the Board to make an offer for the performance of this work for the balance of the year.

Ald. McIntyre replied that there remained $200 of the street cleaning appropriation and he would be glad to offer it to the company. Mayor Duffus and Ald. Duncan moved in this direction, and Mrs. Hamilton accepted, stating that he wished the Board could have made a more liberal remuneration for the work.

Prominence of the Sweeper.

Incidentally Mr. Hamilton remarked that experts from New York and Chicago would be here this week to inspect the work of the Dominion Industrial Sweeper's machine, news of which was spreading in the United States and Canada. In a short time a gutter sweeping attachment would be added to the machine.

Mr. Hamilton pointed out that the citizens and interested visitors had commented upon the efficient operation of the Peterborough sweeper. The company was anxious that the local streets should be a model of cleanliness in view of the fact that the company is located here. An Ottawa man recently remarked that the capital would be delighted if its streets were kept as clean as Peterborough's. No machine used in the American cities Mr. Hamilton said, could approach the work of that of the local company.

Wrote To His Mother in His Dying Hour

Special to The Examiner.

TORONTO, Oct. 19.—Capt. R. E. Horkins, of Campbellford, Ont., medical graduate of the University of Toronto, and a well-known lacrosse and Rugby player, with a premonition of the death that awaited him in the next day's fighting, wrote his mother a beautiful letter on the eve of the battle, and left it with his friend, the Chaplain, to be mailed in case his end came the next day. He fell while attending the wounded, killed by the same shell as his major and his friend, so his mother, Mrs. T. J. Horkins, of Campbellford, received the letter, which concluded as follows: "As for you dear mother, you will be in my dying thoughts." Capt. Horkins lived for nearly an hour after being hit, and in his dying hour he still thought of his mother, and while he struggled with approaching death in the dressing station, he wrote her another letter. She received this letter also, and knows from this sacred treasure that her splendid son's last earthly thoughts were given to her alone. The Adjutant of the 77th Brigade, Royal Field Artillery, of which Capt. Horkins was medical officer, says Horkins was absolutely fearless. He went at the call of duty to tend the wounded men on the most dangerous fronts, with shells raining all around him.

To-morrow Night's Show Is An Excellent One

The All Star Revue Put on a Varied and Pleasing Programme

Very rarely does a threatre-goer get the opportunity to see a genuine revue, except in the larger cities. Probably in the first time since Peterborough was big enough to support a theatre, a splendid vaudeville show with top-notch talent is visiting the city. To-morrow the players of the all-star revue will come here from a successful week in Toronto to appear at the Grand Opera House, Friday and Saturday evenings, and Saturday matinee. This revue is being produced under the auspices of the Canadian Red Cross Society (Peterborough Branch) which will receive a reasonable share of the receipts. The company, which includes such entertainers as Lou Skuce, the famous cartoonist; the clever and versatile Kifalty Children, and Morris Manley, the patriotic song writer, is touring Canada, and it is quite within reason to say that it is the best show playing on the Canadian circuit. The performance has been endorsed by the Toronto press, and is sure to please the most critical.

H. G. O. L. TO BE INVESTIGATED

OTTAWA, Oct. 19.—The sub-committee of the Cabinet Council named to consider the question of the high cost of living, will to-morrow listen to representations of municipal, labour and other bodies interested in the situation. It is expected that the delegation to wait upon the Minister will be a large one. Many people are expected from Ontario towns and cities, also representatives from Montreal.

The Government proposes to take some action at as early date, and is anxious to secure the views of as many representative people as possible.

The Lindsay Post says: Mr. F. D. McKay, General Manager of the Canadian Machine Telephone Company, arrived in town this morning in company with Mr. C. E. Edwards, insurance adjustor and inspected the Company's plant, which was destroyed by fire early Tuesday morning.

It is the intention of the Company to resume operations as speedily as possible. While the loss is a heavy one for the Company, it is the interruption to business which causes the greatest concern. Immediate steps will be taken to give their subscribers telephonic service as soon as the equipment can be installed.

Bogey of Overdraft Haunts Board of Works' Operations

Ald. McIntyre reminded the Board of Works last night that its financial nose is just above the overdraft surface and predicted that the year's operations would show a deficit unless the Board's activities were reduced to a minimum.

Ald. Duncan objected to the idea of pruning at the close of the year in something of the same scale of the operation the estimates underwent in January. During the remaining two months there would undoubtedly arise certain work that would have to be done. The citizens would prefer the execution of such work to the empty effort of preventing a slight overdraft. The Board would get no thanks for this attitude.

Ald. McIntyre pointed out that the appropriation to the Board for the year was $19,600 and that on Sept. 30, $19,089.53 had been spent. In the years 1914 and 1915 there had been overdrafts by the Board of Works the chairman said, and a comparison of the Board's credit and estimated expenditure promised only $33 of a credit balance. The Borne siding would cost about $80 and there would be other work which would have to be done, the cost of which would increase the looming deficit.

Mayor Duffus felt that only the absolutely necessary work should be undertaken.

BOARD OF WORKS DOINGS

The Purdy & Henderson Company, the contractors on the new Royal Bank building, corner of Hunter and George streets, presented the plans of their building and of the location of two openings they want in the sidewalk. A coal chute on George street in front of the Bank of Ottawa building and a lift for ashes around on Hunter street, and a prism grating for basement illumination, comprised their request which the Board recommended on motion of Mayor Duffus and Ald. Saunders, with the usual proviso regarding a liability agreement.

Meet Douro Council.

Ald. McIntyre, Ald. Duncan and Mr. Parsons will meet Douro Council regarding the $175 the city expended on the river road. The Council owes about $75 to the township and an effort will be made to adjust these road work accounts.

Not Fault of Sewer.

Mr. Parsons reported that the water in the Bell terrace cellars at Park and Townsend corners, was not due to any sewer fault.

Crescent Street Sewer.

The grade of Crescent street prevents the laying of a sewer on Crescent street from Romaine to Hazgart. Mr. Parsons suggested that the sewer might be possible if a street or right of way were opened from Crescent to Ware street.

A NEW HOBBY---FOR WOMEN

MISS M. C. MACKEY of Alberta has lately found a new hobby, pleasant and profitable. A few months ago she first became acquainted with the Canadian Home Journal and immediately seized on the hobby of showing to her friends, what virtues she had found, so helpful to women and the Home, in this splendid Canadian Journal.

Almost immediately her friends began to ask her to send in their names as subscribers and nearly two hundred have helped her to establish the foundation for a permanent business. The profits of which are liberal and renewals count just as much as new subscriptions.

Our subscription price changes to $1.50 a year on January 1st, consequently, the next few months should produce a handsome lot of business for you. Do you want a schooling for yourself or your friend?

"THE LITTLE FORTUNE"

BY ARNOLD FREDERICKS

It was locked, but by the dim hall light she saw the elevator-boy inside, asleep on his chair. She rapped sharply on the glass door.

The boy woke, rubbed his eyes sleepily and admitted her.

"Is Mr. Charles Vernon in?" she asked nervously, referring to the letter she had secured at the Rochambeau to make sure of the name.

"No, ma'am. He's gone out."

"Are you sure?"

The boy went to the telephone desk back of the elevator and rang up the apartment. He continued his efforts for some minutes. There was no response.

"He ain't in," he remarked, hanging up the receiver.

"Did a lady come here to see him during the evening — a little before nine?"

"I couldn't say, ma'am. I'm the night-boy. I don't come on till ten. I saw him go out about an hour ago. There was a lady with him then."

"You haven't any idea where they went? He didn't say anything, did he, or tell you when he would be back?"

"No, ma'am. Didn't say anything to me. He had a big satchel in his hand. I guess he was goin' away somewhere."

Grace felt baffled. Undoubtedly, she thought, the woman was Mlle. Mercier. What should she do next? Return to the Hotel Rochambeau. Possibly the man had taken the young French girl back there. She thanked the boy for his trouble and was about to go when they both became aware of a knocking at the door, and saw standing outside a man of about forty, dressed in somber black.

The boy opened the door and the newcomer entered. Grace started at his first question. "Is Mr. Charles Vernon in," he asked.

"No, sah. He's gone out," replied the boy.

Grace stepped up to the man. "I, also, am looking for him," she said. "The boy tells me he went away an hour ago, carrying a satchel as though about to leave the city."

The man's face fell. "Too bad. I had something for him," he said. "Are you a friend of his?"

"Yes," said Grace unblushingly. "What can I do for you?"

"Well," said the man, "you see, I'm Myers, the undertaker, down in the next block. I had charge of the funeral of Mr. Vernon's brother. He was buried to-day. To-night, when we were straightening up, we found this." He took a small package from his pocket. "One of my men removed it from the body while preparing it for burial and forgot to replace it. No excuse for his carelessness, I know; but those things sometimes happen. We only discovered it a little while ago. I hurried around with it to return it to Mr. Vernon. Thought he might like to have it."

"What is it?" asked Grace, puzzled.

The man opened the package slowly. "Of course," he said, "it's not of any great value, but I thought Mr. Vernon ought to have it. If you are a friend of his, perhaps you can tell me where he has gone, and I'll send it to him." He removed the bit of brown paper covering the package and exposed to view a small round gold locket attached to a bit of silk ribbon. "It was around his neck," the man explained.

Grace took the locket and examined it carefully. Upon one side was engraved a monogram consisting of the two letters "G" and "V," interlaced. "His initials," remarked the undertaker, pointing to the monogram with a stubby forefinger. "Rather neat bit of engraving, too."

Grace opened the locket. Inside was the picture of a very pretty, dark-eyed young girl, and under it the words, faintly engraved on the gold rim, "From Georgette. — Faithful unto death."

She turned to the man. "I not think Mr. Vernon will return to-night," she said; "but I shall see him first thing to-morrow morning. I will give the locket to him, if you wish."

"Will you?" said Mr. Myers, relieved. "I shall be very much obliged to you miss. He will no doubt want to keep it in memory of his brother."

"Where was Mr. Vernon buried?" inquired Grace as she slipped the locket into her purse.

"On Staten Island." He mentioned the name of the cemetery. "Nothing wrong about the matter, I hope? The certificate of death was perfectly regular."

"Nothing that I know of," Grace replied. "Good-night." She went out and instructed the chauffeur of the taxicab to take her back to the Hotel Rochambeau. As they left she glanced at her watch. It was half-past twelve.

On the way down-town Grace tried to figure out some solution of the mystery of the purser's death and the events which had followed it. In the first place, why had he had murdered at all? The theft of the one-franc piece seemed an entirely insufficient reason. And why was the man Hartmann, who had murdered his companion, Reinhardt, and why had he done it?

And who, too, was this brother of the purser's who had so suddenly appeared on the scene? Was he no brother at all, but the man Hartmann himself? She longed to see her husband and find out what he had learned.

The Hotel Rochambeau was dark when she reached it, but by dint of much ringing of the bell she managed to awaken the night porter, a swarthy and heavily built Gascon. He informed her gruffly that M'lle. Mercier had not returned, and shut the door in her face.

Grace was by no means satisfied. She dismissed the taxicab and walked slowly along the street, crossing to the other side to avoid attraction from the Porter. It was dark there, and she paused in the shadow of a doorway and looked across at the hotel. A single light shone in the office, and through the window she could see the porter nodding in his chair.

The night was oppressively warm. As she glanced toward Sixth Avenue she saw the coloured lights in the window of a drug store. It occurred to her to telephone the hotel and ascertain if Richard had returned. A few moments sufficed to learn that he had not. She left word that she was safe and would be back later on; then, more worried than before she retraced her steps to the shelter of the doorway.

Clearly the prefect and her husband as well, were out on the case. It seemed to her unlikely that they would not be somewhere in the vicinity of Mlle. Mercier. And the latter had left the apartment on One Hundred and Tenth Street an hour before, accompanied by the man who called himself Charles Vernon. Surely the girl would soon return to the hotel. She determined to wait a while longer.

Mechanically she glanced over to the hotel window. She could no longer see the porter. The shade of the window had been drawn. This circumstance struck her as being extremely peculiar. She crossed the street at once and peered at the window, but it told her nothing.

Had Mlle. Mercier returned, she wondered while she was away telephoning? She was at the point of ringing the bell to inquire when she heard the sound of footsteps inside, coupled with a queer, muffled report that sounded like an explosion heard afar off.

She was undecided as to what to do. Clearly something was going on inside the office—she did not just know what. She waited for several minutes, but heard nothing more. Then it occurred to her that the best thing to do would be to call a policeman. She descended the steps softly and started toward the corner.

She had not gone half the distance when she heard footsteps behind her, and before she realized it a man and woman passed. The woman's face she could not see. The man turned toward her inquiringly, and she got a momentary glimpse of his features. They seemed singularly familiar, yet she could not place them. For a moment she thought of the man she had followed the night before—the one who had struck her with the satchel; but he had been clean-shaven, with the exception of a small mustache, while this man wore a short, curly beard.

There was a certain familiarity about the man's walk and general appearance, however, that impressed her forcibly. As the couple reached the street-lamp at the corner she saw that this man, too, carried a satchel, and then she made a discovery.

It was the same satchel. The man was undoubtedly Hartmann. She decided to follow him at once.

CHAPTER VIII.

The Box of Havana Cigars.

The faintness which overcame M. Dumas when he was struck down from behind in Mr. Vernon's apartment was but momentary. In a few seconds his consciousness returned with a rush.

He perceived at once several things. The first was that he lay partly on his face on the floor, his left arm bent under him, his left elbow touching some article of furniture. The second was that Mlle. Mercier had ceased to scream, and that the man calling himself Charles Vernon had been joined by a woman, who was engaged in tying the girl's hands behind her back with a curtain cord, while her companion fastened a handkerchief across her mouth. Evidently but a few seconds had elapsed since his fall.

A third impression, and perhaps the most serious of all, crossed M. Dumas's confused mind. He had in his waistcoat the one-franc piece which he had surreptitiously taken from Mlle. Mercier in exchange for the one he knew was now lying on the table. In a few moments he would be searched and the fraud discovered.

With nervous fingers he felt in his waistcoat pocket for the coin. His left arm, doubled under him, brought his hand close to the pocket. In an instant he had drawn out the franc and held it beneath his body.

He could just see the others out of the corner of his eye. They had by this time managed to render the young girl quite helpless, and were forcing her into a chair. There was no time to be lost.

Against his head rested some article of furniture. He turned slightly and saw that it was a small smoking-table, standing against the wall. On the lower shelf was an object that looked like a box. With the fingers of his left hand he managed to reach it, and, with the coin still in them, pushed up the lid.

Thrusting his hand downward, he touched a number of small cylindrical objects which he realized were cigars. There was no time for further thought. Already he heard the man and woman coming forward. He forced the one-franc-piece deep down among the contents of the box, and withdrew his hand just as the two seized him from behind and dragged him toward the centre of the room.

He rose at once and found himself gazing into the blue muzzle of a revolver.

"Search him," he heard the man with the curly black beard say to the woman.

The latter systematically went through all his pockets, placing the various objects she took from them on the table. They consisted of a watch, handkerchief, keys, pencil, a roll of bills, and a few pieces of silver. The man examined them hastily. "It's not here," he exclaimed in an exasperated voice.

"Are you looking for anything in particular, my friend?" asked M. Dumas coolly.

RUSH FOR BIG GUNS FRANCE USES GIANTS

Germans Claimed to Make a 54 Centimetre Gun With Thirty-eight Mile Range—Amazing Results

A memorandum of the War College Division of the General Staff of the United States Army has this to say of the new artillery weapons: "The French have been making a new 370-millimeter (14.6-inch) howitzer. Six or eight have been completed and are to be sent into the field immediately. This piece was under study when the war broke out, and is comparatively simple to construction. The trials have given most satisfactory results." At the outbreak of the war the whole mobile artillery of France consisted, the War College states, substantially of the 65-millimeter (2.65 inch) mountain, 75-millimeter (2.95-inch) field gun, and the 155-millimeter (6.1-inch) rapid fire Rimailho gun.

Ordered Many

"About one month before the outbreak of the war," the War College report adds, "six regiments of 105-millimeter (4.14-inch) guns were authorized, but the guns were not ready for issue at the outbreak of the war. Since then these regiments have been furnished with and these other calibres have been introduced: 155-millimeter (6-inch) Schneider rapid-fire howitzers; 280-millimeter (10.5-inch) howitzers; 305-millimeter (12-inch) navy gun, mounted on railway carriage; 340-millimeter (13.3-inch) navy gun, mounted on railway carriage.

The report refers to the effectiveness of the German 42-centimeter guns, and adds the statement that "it is claimed that the Krupp Company has now perfected the 54-centimeter (21.26-inch) gun with a range of thirty-eight miles."

Austrians Use Them

The Austrians, according to a report quoted in the War College document, are using their large guns up to the 45-centimeter type against field works, field guns, storage depots, railway stations, and villages where troops are quartered, and to destroy entanglements. "These uses," adds the report, "are made because the guns are available. The writer has seen the effect of fire of the 30.5 centimeter and 45 centimeter mortars on semi-permanent earthworks. The craters on the hill in the rear of the line of works were twenty feet deep and thirty feet in diameter."

Would He Explode?

Apropos the naming of the giant shells at the front after the well known prize-fighter, Jack Johnson, this negro bruiser was sitting in his car in London the other day, and a little girl of about seven years of age was one of the inevitable crowd that gluckly gathered to stand and stare in mild curiosity at the ex-champion. On being told that he was Jack Johnson, the child showed some alarm. Assured that he would not hurt her, the little maid replied, "But mightn't he explode?"

ECZEMA ON THE HEAD.

Mr. Peterson, South Bay, Ont., writes: "For years I suffered a sort of eczema on the head. I tried four different doctors, giving each a fair trial, but the disease grew worse and spread to my arm. I got Dr. Chase's Ointment, and it has entirely cured me. I give you my name because I want other sufferers to know about this splendid Ointment."

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

LADY'S SHIRT WAIST.

By Anabel Worthington.

A sensible and smart design in a shirt waist with cuffs and collar quietly brought into contrasting goods in one [illegible] is a tendency to favor the high collar later on, designers are giving attention to the manner in which a collar opens, as the blouse must look equally well whether open or closed at the neck.

The "tailored girl" will like the model illustrated, with its four tucks in each front, two close to the armhole and two at either side of the centre. The back is plain, gathered slightly at the waistline to a stay belt.

The sleeves are plain and full in wrist length, finished with a double cuff in two tone effect; one may, however, have the sleeves just turning the elbow and finishing with a roll cuff. The button decoration suggests the great vogue that buttons will have for fall.

This up-to-the-minute style may be developed in linen, pongee, silk and similar weaves by any one. The pattern is as easy to follow as a recipe for a cake.

No. 7308 is cut in sizes 36 to 44 bust. To make in size 36 will require 2¼ yards of 36 inch material and ¼ yard of 30 inch contrasting goods.

You may obtain the pattern by sending [illegible] to the office of this publication.

When ordering, remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required, and age of a child.

NEW PEACE TWISTINGS.

Germans Striving to Effect a "Deal" With Russia.

AMSTERDAM, Oct. 19. — The German Chancellor's references to Russia are interpreted by Herr Bassermann's papers as indicating that the Government intends to try to arrange a separate peace with Russia on the basis of concessions in the Balkans, including a revision of the Berlin Treaty and the "neutralization" of the Dardanelles.

The Vorwaertz says this is the view of very influential people. Krupp's Berlin organ, Die Post, supports the same proposal and suggests that other Balkan concessions could be made.

However, the propaganda has made the Turks uneasy, and, as the Daily Mail recently pointed out, they are asking, "Where do we come in?"

According to information reaching Holland, Baron Kuhlmann's appointment as Ambassador at Constantinople is largely due to growing Turkish dissatisfaction and uneasiness.

SAILOR PRINCE GEORGE

"Handyman Who Boasts Is King's Fourth Son

Fair complexioned like his brothers and with a typically honest, open British face, Prince George, the King's fourth son, should make a splendid sailor, and is delighted that the Navy has been selected as his career. Like all the Royal children the Prince is very young-looking for his years, and that is why every one still speaks of his as "little" Prince George. He was born December 2, 1902.

Prince George is hugely interested in Zepps, and envies the airmen who have the chance of going up to fight them. He is very keen on learning all there is to know about anti-aircraft guns too. When home on leave, both his soldier brother, the Prince of Wales, and his middy brother, Prince Albert, have a busy time of it answering all their young brother's questions about the war.

When he heard how his brother Prince Henry had been helping in war work at Eton lately, Prince George was frankly envious. Some people have all the luck," he remarked when someone showed him a paper containing snapshots of his elder brother and a number of fellow Etonians helping the Army Ordnance Corps by doing such jobs as pushing trolleys, hauling waggons, and loading trucks. In fact, doing all sorts of railway porter work pro tem. But all the same, when he is home on holidays, Prince George does his bit of war work too. Then he spends nearly all his spare time knitting for Queen Mary's Needlework Guild. He sent the Guild quite a big collection of scarves which he had knitted in a pretty shade of green, and just to give them a touch of colour, he decorated them with tassels of bright red!

Like all true sailors the young Prince is a real "handyman," for he can sew on buttons and tape and even mend stockings at a pinch. Queen Mary has always believed in bringing up her sons to help themselves in this way, and this useful training stands Prince George in good stead. Both the Prince of Wales and Prince Albert have been at Osborne before him.

RUSSIANS IN FRANCE HOME VIA BERLIN

Glimpses of Contingents that Came By Sea—Very Interesting as Soldiers

H. Warner Allen, representative of the British press with the French army writes as follows:

These Russian soldiers came to France by sea; but their way home lies through Germany. "I told my men," said Colonel Notchvolodoff, commanding the First Regiment, "after our interminable voyage, that it was possible to bring troops such an enormous distance to fight, but that for nothing in the world would I consent to their being taken back by sea. We are going to fight our way back to Russia by land, at the bayonet's point. . . The men were delighted at the idea because, like me, they hate the sea."

At first glance the Camp de Mailly may differ not at all from any ordinary camp—commodious wooden huts ranged in orderly lines, muddy open spaces, and all the bustle of camp life. But then the eye falls on the regimental colors, carefully rolled and sheathed to protect them from the rain, standing in the centre of the huts allotted to the regiment, with a grey uniformed sentinel standing beside them motionless as a statue.

Patriarchal

"Good day, sentinel," says the colonel as he passes. In stentorian tones the sentinel replies, at the salute: "At your service, your Excellency; all is well." Nothing is more typical of the Russian spirit than the relations between officers and men. They are patriarchal, or rather paternal, in their simplicity. Wherever the colonel goes he calls out his greeting, and the men reply in hearty unison. A private may be 50 or so yards away, and the same formality takes place. When the men be 10, 20, or the whole regiment, their are grouped together, whether they reply to the colonel's salutation is shouted out, as by one man, with a vigorous sincerity that tells both of devotion and discipline.

Picturesque Worship

The Russian soldier's uniform is practical, simple, and admirably adapted for modern war. The men one and all, are well built and admirably drilled and disciplined. They come from all parts of Russia. Every regiment has its chorus of singers. These are men who, in their native towns and villages, have made a name for themselves by their voices, and they sing with a degree of natural feeling and expression, as well as with a perfection of technique that would put to shame the trained choirs of less musical countries. At mass, where the Russian singing is best to be appreciated, the ikons, the sacred images of the regiment, some of which were very ancient, were set in a little hut with only three sides, and before them burned countless tapers that smoked and guttered in the wind. The hut was painted in bright colors with the naive designs of a Russian isba. In the open, facing the ikons, was massed the whole regiment, bareheaded. Under the roof of the little chapel, at the head of his men, stood the colonel, and around him his officers. The priest, the regimental chaplain, was a striking figure in his robes of white silk, and with his long hair and flowing beard. He had been through the whole campaign in Russia, and wears about his neck a golden cross, a decoration that had been conferred upon him by the Emperor of Russia.

CANADIAN'S LAST WORD

Lieutenant James Stanley Lightfoot Welch, Yorkshire Light Infantry, killed on Dominion Day, was the only son of Canon Welch, formerly rector of St. James' Cathedral, Toronto, now vicar of Wakefield, and Mrs. Welch. Born at Toronto in 1896, he was educated at the Preparatory School of Upper Canada College, Toronto, at Yardley Court, Tonbridge, and at Rugby, where he was a member of the O.T.C. and a scholar. When war broke out he applied for a commission and was gazetted in October, 1914, being promoted in the following May. A letter from his commanding officer says that while leading his platoon against the enemy he was first wounded by a bullet and fell, but was immediately afterwards killed by a shell. His last words to his platoon were, "Never mind me; carry on."—London Times.

ROBERTSON CLIMBED THROUGH HARD WORK

Linguistic and Organizing Ability Also Counted For Much—Fed French's Army

Sir William Robertson, wrote a London journalist when that officer became chief of staff, has two special faculties which few young army officers can ever be accused of possessing—a remarkable gift for language and an extraordinary appetite for hard work. In India the linguistic accomplishment means the acquisition of numerous dialects, and his knowledge of these rendered Lieutenant Robertson an invaluable intelligence officer. Never without a job, Robertson always had time for more work. Others might play polo, but he was intent upon the pursuit of his profession. Now a railway transport officer with the Mirzani expedition, now an intelligence officer at headquarters up in the hills, Robertson was always doing work that mattered. And when the South African War broke out he became a staff officer and lieutenant-colonel.

Rose Rapidly

The rest of his career has been a series of rapid promotions, which have carried the quondam trooper of Lancers to the highest post in the greatest army Britain has ever raised. But they have been promotions of the kind that people outside the army never hear about. Who could know, for instance, outside a limited circle of army men, that Robertson, as Commandant of the Staff College for three years, was proving himself one of the ablest heads of the thinking part of the army machine the British have ever had, one of the finest lecturers any ambitious young officer could wish to listen to on matters of military training.

French's Assistant

When the Great War broke out Sir William went to France as Quarter-master-General in the field. This was a big job, indeed, for he had to supply the needs of the Expeditionary Force in every detail through those difficult and critical weeks when the army was constantly on the move from Mons to Marne. The problems of feeding the army—and Tommy will tell you that never was the army so well fed as it has been during this war—were severely complicated when the base was suddenly transferred from Boulogne to never-mind-where-else in France. But the Quartermaster-General was equal to all emergencies. "Meals always punctual" seemed to be the motto of his department, and Robertson became popular as the Man behind the Grub.

When he became Chief of the General Staff at Viscount French's headquarters he had to scheme operations at the front as well as maintain supplies in the rear. Whether those plans of operations achieve successful results necessarily depends on the skill and bravery with which they are carried out by generals, officers, and men in the field. The "best-laid schemes . . . aft gang agley," we know, and possibly there have been times when "the Chief" has had occasion to say things and hard things, too!.

PAPINEAU TO BOURASSA

Solemn Warning From French-Canadian Hero to Politician

Extract from Capt. Talbot M. Papineau's letter to Henri Bourassa: Perhaps, my cousin, I have been overlong and tedious with my reasons, but I shall be shorter with my warning, and in closing I wish to say this to you: Those of us in this great army who may be so fortunate as to return to our Canada will have faced the grimmest and sincerest issues of life and death—we will have experienced the unhappy strength of brute force—we will have seen our loved comrades die in blood and suffering. Beware lest we return with revengeful feelings, for I say to you that for those who, while we fought and suffered here, remained in safety and comfort in Canada and failed to give us encouragement and support, as well as for those who grew fat with the wealth, dishonorably gained by political graft and by dishonest business methods at our expense, we shall demand a heavy day of reckoning. We shall inflict upon them the punishment they deserve, not by physical violence, for we shall have had enough of that, nor by unconstitutional or illegal means, for we are fighting to protect, not to destroy justice and freedom—but by the invincible power of our moral influence.

INSULTING JIBES

Stinging Reply to Certain Element of American Criticism

"The patience of Canadians has been particularly tried by insulting jibes in a section of the American Press and the ribald songs at American vaudeville shows reflecting on the honor and bravery of the British army. It is only natural, perhaps, that a country which has produced the marching song, 'I Didn't Bring Up My Boy to be a Soldier,' should also be responsible for the unjustifiable taunt, 'Everyone is fighting now but England.' The suggestion that Great Britain was sparing her own men in this war comes with bad grace from men in the United States whose interest in the European war is so largely one of finance. In Canada it was known that the Kitchener tradition, of preparedness before striking, would be followed inexorably to the last detail. It is Kitchener's army, Kitchener's plans, and Kitchener's invincible spirit that are now pitted against the German army of defence. Here in Canada, where men have made the supreme sacrifice and not counted the cost, where faith in the ultimate triumph of British arms never weakened, this allied advance, with its note of calm confidence and its stirring tale of success, may be recalled in the coming years as a turning point in the European crisis."—Toronto Globe.

BAD GERMAN MEDICINE

Mischievous Twaddle Which the Fatherland Swallows by Order

Dwellers in the United States or Canada who assume that their cosmopolitan races are destined to have a share in the volution of humanity and civilisation, according to the theories of Professor Baron von Lichtenberg, are doomed to cruel disappointment. In "The Destruction of English World Power" published under the auspices of the German Government he makes some astonishing statements. Professor von Lichtenberg's article begins with a violent denunciation of the treachery and turpitude of the enemies of Germany which he says stand out in strong contrast with Germany's purity of motives and self-denying magnanimity. Then he continues: "Only peoples of pure race are able to create and develop pure and genuine 'Kultur.'"

He admits with a sigh of regret that no original race in the world has remained absolutely pure, but Germans and Scandinavians, he declares, are those who come nearest to the ideal, and it is to these, therefore, that we must look for "Kultur." All the enemies of Germany, on the other side, have suffered from a constant influx of foreign blood from the very earliest days of their existence, and because of this they have lost all understanding of "Kultur."

There is not the slightest doubt that all French "Kultur" (the professor is kind enough to admit the existence of such a thing) is due to German blood, but now this German blood is no more of the same importance in France, for in all mixing of races it is always the nobler blood which suffers and the mixed races become less prolific than the pure ones.

He says the Russian empire is made up of a multitude of races and has, therefore, produced no Kultur, except in the Baltic provinces, where a German "Herren Volk" (master race) rules the lower strata of the population and forms a basis for Kultur. The English are just as mixed, a fact which is plainly proved by the grammar of the English language. As to America!

AMBULANCES ON CANALS

Visit To Marvellous British Institution is Described

La Recontouse writes from Paris: With a number of French journalists and ladies of the French Red Cross I have just returned from a visit to the districts immediately behind the British front on the Somme, where we had an opportunity to see the marvellous efficient manner in which the English look after the welfare of their wounded men. After being received with charming courtesy we were allowed to go practically where we pleased and inspect anything we wanted as long as we did not go near the actual danger zone which our English hosts assured us was no place for us, "not because we have anything to conceal, but because that world can not afford to lose so many noble-hearted and beautiful ladies."

We paid a most interesting visit on board one of the splendid canal boat ambulances which are used for the transport of the wounded. These boats go practically into the very zone of fire, and picking up the wounded from the field dressing stations, they carry them back comfortably and smoothly to the base hospitals far in the rear. A few moments after our little company had stepped on board we found ourselves floating gently down the canal between beautiful green banks, towed by a small tug boat which made its three miles an hour with its string of barges, on the sides of which were painted enormous red crosses.

Each barge carries thirty wounded men, a surgeon, a druggist and five male and three female nurses belonging to "Queen Alexandra's Imperial Corps." These nurses are under military control and receive every convenience for the comfort of the wounded. The beds which are placed quite far apart have rubber blankets, movable head and back rests, and bedside tables which enable the men to eat while lying down. The ward is lighted by electricity supplied by a dynamo and at the side of each bed is a little table with fresh cut flowers. In the drug department we found an ample supply of bandages, sterilizing apparatus and drugs of every kind even to stimulating French champagne of the best brands and choicest vintages.

COL. HARRY BAKER, M.P. PLAYED HEROIC PART

Captain W. R. Rhoades, adjutant, thus writes to Miss Effie Baker, of the death of her brother, Lieut.-Col. Harry Baker, M.P., in the Battle of Zillebeke: "From 9 a.m. until 9.30 we were subject to an intense fire from guns of all calibres. The battalion was in support about 500 yards in the rear of the first line trenches and in such a position that we could not get any adequate protection from the rain of heavy shells which seemed to search out every corner of our line.

Calm and Cheerful

"To keep a stout heart at such a time when you cannot see your enemy or get a chance to return any of the fire you are subjected to is no easy task, but for over 12 hours your brother not only made whatever dispositions were required from time to time with cool and calm judgment, but by his cheerfulness to us acted as that none could be otherwise than truly unafraid.

"He always had a cheery word to say to each of us as he passed along the line and the answering smile was always forthcoming, indicating clearer than anything else could have done the love and perfect confidence each felt in his commanding officer.

"Our casualities were very heavy and about 8.30 p.m. the fire increased to its utmost intensity. From the intensity of the fire we judged that an attack would shortly be made on this section of our line and had just decided that the few of us who were left—seven were all we could muster here—could not hope to do very much to stem it when a shell burst amongst us, killing or wounding all of us who were left, except Capt. Draper, who received a bad shaking from the force of the explosion.

Received Death Wounds

"Up to this time the colonel's cheery voice had always been heard whenever a shell or bomb burst very near, calling 'Are you all right, captain?' I was not badly hurt and called out: 'Are you all right, sir?' Getting no answer I felt over for the colonel and found him lying unconscious but breathing faintly.

"I cannot attempt to tell you how we got our dearly-loved commander out of the trench and across the firing line to a wood for about a hundred yards till we got into a communication trench. Here we were able to render first aid but though everything possible was done the colonel never regained consciousness and died just as we got to the nearest dressing station."

SHOE-SHINER'S ART

Where Real Professional Men Operate Upon Soldier's Boots

Boot-cleaning, one of the milder recreations that Salonica offers, ranks among the national industries of Greece. To sit drinking little cups of thick Turkish coffee and having his boots cleaned at the same time is the Greek's idea of a pleasant afternoon. The "lustres," as a Greek shoeblack is musically called, though usually of tender age, is a true artist, and is by no means content with the dull burnish that satisfies the English boot-boy. He first meticulously scrapes your boot clean of the smallest fragment of mud, then wipes it carefully, so as to have a perfectly clean background to work in. After that he applied the blacking, not by dabbing the blacking brush into the tin, but with a variety of little implements and sponges. When he has brought this to a bright polish you imagine that your shine is over but it has really only begun, for the "lustros" now goes on to bring out the high lights by smearing your boot over with a colorless cream, which he brushes again to great brilliance, and finishes off by two or three minutes' friction with a velvet cloth. He completes his work by painting the edge of sole and heel with a sort of varnish.

If you attempt during all this time to withdraw your foot before he is satisfied with the effect produced, the "lustroff" knocks imperiously with the back of his brush. Successful "lustrol" even have a little nickel-plated bell which they ring to call your attention when they are ready for the other foot, as it is the etiquette of the profession never to speak to a client after first attracting his attention by hammering upon their little wooden boxes. For all this you pay the "lustros" ten lepta, or one penny, and walk away with a self-conscious feeling that your feet are glittering.

Soldier M.P.'s

A Londoner writes: I was in the House the other day when Captain J. S. Rankin, who succeeded Mr. Marshall Hall in the representation of East Toxteth, took his seat, having obtained short leave for the purpose. Captain Rankin, however, is not the only M.P. who has been elected while on active service. Perhaps the best known case was that of the late Sir Elliott Lees, who was fighting in the South African War at the time of the General Election of 1900. This was his laconic message to his agent in Birkenhead: "Pretoria, August 8th, 1900. You ask for my election address in case a General Election should take place I think the address at the top of this letter will be sufficient, if I know anything about the people of Birkenhead." And it was.

Oliver Cromwell, Jr.

Oliver Cromwell, standing four feet nine, and appearing before the Newport, Monmouth, tribunal, in order to claim exemption from military service in England, is surely an instance of the injustice done in their baptism to those who cannot protect themselves. A Cromwell he, of course, was born, but his parents, godfathers, and godmothers had no right to handicap him with the name of Oliver.

PETROGRAD DURING WAR

Very Dry City But Lenient To Impudent Germans

What makes Petrograd so different from the old St. Petersburg is that nobody speaks German any longer and nobody drinks intoxicating liquor, even wine, writes an Englishman. The city has reformed itself in real earnest and there will be no backsliding. In the beginning the reform met with a very determined resistance, which occasionally made it necessary for the authorities to adopt exceedingly stern measures. Americans, who know the strength of the German element in their own country, are able to realise what the struggle against a similar element has been here.

In spite of the decree forbidding the use of the German language which was posted everywhere there were a number of people who defied it. At first the government closed its eyes but gradually measures were taken to enforce the decree. Offenders were heavily fined and after a while even sent to prison or banished from the country. The number of spies arrested in Petrograd and other large Russian cities was enormous. One Sunday I went into a large Lutheran church within a stone's throw of the Nevsky Prospect. The church was filled with worshippers and I was surprised to discover that the service, including the hymns and the sermon, was conducted entirely in German being prayers said for the German Emperor and "those of our countrymen who are engaged in perilous occupations within the frontiers of Russia."

Many people deplore the fact that the Czar, in order to stamp out the drink evil, has found it necessary to forbid the drinking of wine. But in Russia it was absolutely necessary to take no half measures. If the use of wine had not been forbidden the people would have bought it and made it into alcohol.

Resources Of India

The British government will shortly name a commission to make a survey of the economic resources and industrial possibilities of India, with a view to promoting business enterprise under the changed conditions that will follow the restoration of peace. The chairman of the commission will be Sir Thomas Holland, professor of geology at Manchester University, who was for several years the director of the Indian Geological Survey. The commission will have several Indian members, including three prominent Indian native business men, one a Bengali, one a Parsi and the third a Mohammedan.

ZAM-BUK

ECONOMIC PROBLEMS IN CANADA.

It is true that, to offset the extra cost of his food and raiment which the Canadian now faces, he has, if an active worker, been getting more and steadier work, and at considerable increase of wage. Nor has the Canadian producer of basic food supplies aught to complain of. The main element yet to be affected, and forced to endure the pinch is the salaried group, which is unorganized, not vocal in any commanding way, unskilled in furthering group interests, and not receiving any increase of income while meeting enforced expenditure for food, raiment and other necessities, and also, in some cases, facing new forms of taxation. As it is from this class, and not from the proletariat, that many leading radicals of all countries come, it is interesting to speculate as to what will be the effect, upon coming political and social changes in the Dominion, of any discontent that may arise within the salaried officials' group and among men practising the professions, following prolonged experience with an era of high prices for daily necessaries.—Christian Science Monitor.

If the Government of New Zealand amends the factory law so as to compel owners to install heating plants there will be a big demand for heating appliances of all kinds.

To Put On Flesh and Increase Weight

Most people eat from four to six pounds of coked solid fat-making food every day and still do not increase in weight one ounce, while on the other hand many of the plump, chunky folks eat very lightly and keep on gaining all the time. It's all bunk to say that this is the nature of the individual. It isn't Nature's way at all.

Often thin people stay thin because their powers of assimilation are defective. They absorb just enough of the food they eat to maintain life and a semblance of health and strength. Stuffing won't help them. A dozen meals a day won't make them gain a single "stay there" pound. All the fat-producing elements of their food just stay there in the intestines until they pass from the body as waste. What such people need is something that will prepare these fatty food elements so that their blood can absorb and deposit them all about the body—something too that will multiply their red blood corpuscles and increase their blood's carrying power.

For such a condition it is well to recommend eating a Sargol Tablet with every meal. Sargol is not, as some believe, a patented drug, but is simply a careful combination of six of the most effective and powerful assimilative and flesh-building elements known to chemistry. It is absolutely harmless yet has been wonderfully effective and a single tablet eaten with each meal often, according to reports of users, has the effect of increasing the weight of a thin man or woman from three to five pounds a week. Sargol is sold by all good druggists everywhere on a positive guarantee of weight increase or money back.

If you find a druggist who is unable to supply you, send $1.00 to Sargol Laboratories, 94 St. Antoine St., Montreal, and a complete ten days' treatment will be sent you postpaid, in plain wrapper.

A Good Way To Prevent Baldness

Says This Recipe Will Often Grow New Hair in Two Weeks' Time.

Most men take baldness as something inevitable though why it passes understanding. There is no more reason why hair should cease to grow on the top of the head than on the sides of the face—and most men have to shave to the end of their days or wear a beard.

If your hair is growing gray or getting thin in patches and you find great quantities of it in your brush and comb, the following recipe for a good home made hair tonic can be earnestly recommended. Get from any druggist 2 oz. of Lavona de Composee and 6 oz. of pure Bay Rum. Mix together, adding one-half drachm of Menthol Crystals and a little perfume if you desire it. This mixture should be allowed to stand over night, when it is ready for use.

This preparation will in almost every instance stop falling hair within two or three days and numerous instances have been reported in which it has been the cause of new hair growth after years of partial baldness. It is quite important in using the prescription to apply the tonic directly on the scalp, rubbing briskly into the pores with the finger tips so that the hair roots can absorb its full nourishment. While the preparation contains no coloring matter and will not make the hair greasy or sticky, it often will restore hair to its natural color by its revitalizing action on the hair roots.

BULLER'S FINE DEATH

Running Along Parapet at Head of Famous Regiment

A particular account of Canadian heroism at the Zillebeke fighting of the Canadians in the Ypres salient follows: The Princess Patricia's fought with their accustomed gallantry, led by the brave Colonel Buller, lately military secretary to H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught, and helped, although at terrible cost, to check the furthest German advance. Buller, his blood up seeing his men giving way a little ordered them to charge along a trench known as Gordon Road. They obeyed with a rush, and, not to impede their onset, Buller leapt up on to the edge of the trench and ran forward, crying: "On, boys, on! Break them to pieces!"

He was thus encouraging them when a bullet pierced his heart. "I never saw a finer death," one man said. "He looked very brave and handsome up there, outlined against the sky, the only figure on the bank above, his helmet off, and his face very pale and blazing with anger, and his right arm pointing forward. He fell down headlong but we never turned back until we gave the Germans hell. Two hours later, I was told, the colonel was still lying there on his face on the edge of the trench. Then they turned him over and brought him in."

The second-in-command of the Patricia's, Major Hamilton Gault was severely wounded, and many gallant officers fell.

LAUDS BRITISH AIRMAN

Frenchman Says Even Germans Admit Enemy Superiority

This was how a French officer, just back from the Somme, described the British flying champion in the course of an interview with an English newspaperman. In admiring words he related how the British have wrested the mastery of the air from German fliers: "Your brave aviators," he said, "have come into their own at last, and France to-day salutes them as the lords of the air.

"Even the German fliers who have been captured by us have had the chivalry to admit that the British airmen have accomplished some noteworthy performances. Not only have your intrepid aviators flown far over the German defences and defied the anti-aircraft guns, but single-handed, they have fought and beaten off as many as three and four Fokkers at a time.

"The German fliers, who, months ago, looked with contempt on your airman, respect and admire them as the result of bitter experience. That great young British aviator who sent Captain Immelmann to his death has become a terror to the Boche. You ought to have him on all your picture-postcards. Like all your men he is a real hero, and France is proud and gratified for their invaluable co-operation."

STRIPES FOR WOUNDS

Britain Prescribes New Decoration For Heroes Of War

A British army order states that the following distinctions in dress will be worn on the service dress jacket by all officers and soldiers who have been wounded in any of the campaigns since August 4, 1914:—Stripes of gold Russia braid, No. 1, two inches in length, sewn perpendicularly on the left sleeve of the jacket to mark each occasion on which wounded.

In the case of officers the lower end of the first strip of gold braid will be immediately above the upper point of the flap on cuff. Warrant officers, non-commissioned officers, and men will wear the gold braid on the left sleeve, the lower edge of the braid to be three inches from the bottom of the sleeve. The additional stripe of gold braid, marking each subsequent occasion on which wounded, will be placed on either side of the original one at half-inch interval. Gold braid and sewings are obtained free on indent from the Army Ordnance Department; the sewing on will be carried out regimentally without expense to the public.

Nationalized Shops

It is the intention of the New South Wales Government to nationalise the liquor trade. The success attendant upon the establishment of Government shops for retailing fish will lead to the establishment as early as possible of a number of State monopolies, including meat, bread, petrol, and other commodities.

THIRST A TRENCH DEMON.

Among the prisoners captured by the British during the present battle of the Somme was a non-commissioned officer of the Twenty-eighth Regiment of the 16th Division of the German army on the Somme. On this soldier the British found a diary, in which the writer had jotted down the story of the ordeal he and his comrades had undergone. In part it read:

"13th August.—At 7 o'clock rations brought up; some bean soup, half a loaf, a slab of chocolate and a little bit of sausage and about a quarter of a litre of coffee for three men. That must suffice for the whole day, for we can get no water. The Eighth Company of the 28th has been for three days without rations.

"Our tongues are hanging out of our mouths with thirst, and not a mouthful of water is to be had. This well is in the village, which is under a barrage. The water, however, is not to be drunk on account of bacilli, etc.

How we are to quench our thirst, however, troubles no one, for the gentlemen officers (Herren Offizieren) take care that they do not suffer."

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

George Caruthers' Luck

By EUNICE BLAKE

George Caruthers was one of those young men whose lives begin at the wrong end. George was born with a silver spoon in his mouth, and he remained there till he was twenty-two years old. Then it gave place to a pewter one. What I mean by this is that he lived a life of luxury until he was a man, then was turned out to scratch for himself. To be still more explicit, he was the son of a rich man who died insolvent.

George tried every way he could think of to make a living and failed in all. One day while hunting for a job he stumbled into a detective office. When told what kind of place he had struck he turned to depart. A man sitting at a desk called to him.

"Young man, you are a gentleman down on your luck. I've got a job for such a person, and I'll pay you well while you're on it whether you succeed or not. A client of mine, Abner Kirke, is missing jewelry; or, rather, his wife and daughters are. I need some one to go into his family as a friend or, at any rate, an equal in refinement, who will keep his eyes and ears open with a view to spotting the thief. How would you like that job?"

George being college bred and there being no good schools in the vicinity of Mr. Kirke's place, it was decided that he should enter the family as tutor. Within a few days he was duly installed and was teaching the girls, especially the oldest one, Luella, to conjugate the Latin verb amo.(I love).

This story being a detective and a love tale combined and there not being room for both, one will need to give way to the other. The love story being of the ordinary kind, I will give the principal part to the other. And yet but for sheer luck there would have been no detective story, for George fell so desperately in love with Luella and Luella fell so desperately in love with George that there was no place whatever in his mind for the work in hand.

It happened that repairs were in progress in the Kirke homestead, and, several of the bedrooms being torn up, George was put into a room adjoining the servants' quarters and on this account seldom used. On the very first night that he slept in this room just as he laid his head on the pillow he heard faintly a distant chime. He had been in the house long enough to know that there was no church with chime bells in the vicinity. He naturally, therefore, wondered. Not being especially sleepy, he lay awake trying to assign a cause for the sounds he had heard.

While thus engaged he heard the chimes again. This time he noted that there were eleven strokes, then an interval, followed by three. An idea occurred to him. Turning on an electric light near his bed, he looked at his watch. The time was 11 o'clock and forty-five minutes. Then he knew that he had heard a watch give eleven strokes for the hour and a stroke for each of the quarter hours.

Remaining awake, he waited for the next strokes, which would indicate midnight. He was sitting up in bed when his watch indicated 12, but heard nothing. It occurred to him that when he had heard the strokes the sounds had been led to his ear through subtances. His bed was a divan with no headboard, and his pillow rested against the wall. When a quarter past 12 came round he had his ear pressed against the wall. He then heard the strokes far more distinctly than before. He was now satisfied that what he heard was a striking watch in the next room, and, his curiosity being allayed, he turned over and went to sleep.

The next day he received a check from the detective agency for services with a note asking what success he was having. In the afternoon he called at the office and reported that he had found no clew. While chatting with the chief he incidentally mentioned the striking watch. The listener looked at him curiously for a moment, then burst into a laugh.

"My dear boy," he said, "you'll never make a detective. You say your room is next the servants' quarters. Do servants have striking watches? I must send a man at once to follow up"—

George interrupted him to beg for a chance to finish the job, and the chief, being convinced that introducing any one else into the Kirke family would put the thief on his guard, consented that he should do so.

George went back to the house and at once entered the room next the one in which he had slept. A bureau stood against the wall, and the divan in which George had slept stood against that part of the wall that the bureau covered. In a bag suspended to the back of the bureau was a lot of jewelry, including a valuable striking watch. The butler was the thief.

Mr. Kirke was the only one in the family in the detective's secret. He knew very well from the first that George was not a regular member of the profession, and when the denotement came was much amused at the way the stolen property had been located. He had also observed what was going on between George and his daughter and, though he did not approve of the match, finally consented to it on condition that George take a subordinate position in his business and prove his metal.

George is now managing the concern.

Not a Bite of Breakfast Until You Drink Water

Says a glass of hot water and phosphate prevents illness and keeps us fit.

Just as coal, when it burns, leaves behind a certain amount of incombustible material in the form of ash es, so the food and drink taken day after day leaves in the alimentary canal a certain amount of indigestible material, which if not completely eliminated from the system each day, becomes food for the millions of bacteria which infest the bowels. From this mass of left-over waste, toxins and ptomain-like poisons are formed and sucked into the blood.

Men and women who can't get feeling right must begin to take inside baths. Before eating breakfast each morning drink a glass of real hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it to wash out of the thirty feet of bowels the previous day's accumulation of poisons and toxins and to keep the entire alimentary canal clean, pure and fresh.

Those who are subject to sick headache, colds, biliousness, constipation, others who wake up with bad taste, foul breath, backache, rheumatic stiffness, or have a sour, gassy stomach after meals, are urged to get a quarter pound of limestone phosphate from the drug store, and begin practicing internal sanitation. This will cost very little, but is sufficient to make anyone an enthusiast on the subject.

Remember inside bathing is more important than outside bathing, because the skin pores do not absorb impurities into the blood, causing poor health, while the bowel pores do. Just as soap and hot water cleanses, sweetens and freshens the skin, so hot water and limestone phosphate act on the stomach, liver kidneys and bowels.

WOMAN HAD NERVOUS TROUBLE

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Helped Her.

West Danby, N. Y.—"I have had nervous trouble all my life until I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for nerves and for female troubles and it straightened me out in good shape. I work nearly all the time, as we live on a farm and I have four girls. I do all my sewing and other work with their help, so it shows that I stand it real well. I took the Compound when my ten year old daughter came and it helped me a lot. I have also had my oldest girl take it and it did her lots of good. I keep it in the house all the time and recommend it."—Mrs. DEWITT SINCLAIRE, West Danby, N. Y.

Sleeplessness, nervousness, irritability, backache, headaches, dragging sensations, all point to female derangements which may be overcome by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

This famous remedy, the medicinal ingredients of which are derived from native roots and herbs, has for forty years proved to be a most valuable tonic and invigorator of the female organism. Women everywhere bear willing testimony to the wonderful virtue of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

LICE IRONED INTO LIFE

Laundresses of French Convent Tried to be Kind to Soldiers

A surgeon writes: The following story will illustrate the vitality of these nasty little beasts of lice. Our Field Ambulance once stopped at a small town in Northern France and was billeted in a French convent. The good sisters allowed us the use of the schoolrooms, the kitchen, and some of the bedrooms. All the officers were anxious to get their shirts and linen washed. The laundrywoman duly appeared and boiled all these articles, and the sisters ironed them for us. On the afternoon of the ironing the Mother Superior and two sisters came to us in a state of excitement, talking rapidly, and evidently overcome with amazement. They explained that our shirts had been boiled and then dried in the open air. When they began to iron the necks of our shirts the lice sprang to life and were exceedingly active. They assured us solemnly that scores sprang to active life under the comfortable warmth of the hot iron.

I do not doubt the story. The heat had [illegible] the chitinous envelope in which [illegible] young lice lay, and out they came, joyous, active and sportive on the nice warm surface. Hence the amazement, the uplifted hands, and the consternation of the good sisters. The riddle of the extermination of lice has not yet been solved completely, but measures are in active progress towards that end.

PETAIN OF VERDUN

Superman, Who Refuses to Advertise, Was Great Lecturer

I asked how it was that General Petain, with all his qualities, was only colonel when the war broke out and so little known, writes Alden Brooks, in Collier's Weekly. "Because he has a horror of advertising," answered one of his officers; "because he hates politicians; because he is a man of uncompromising opinions, and he has made enemies; because he believes he is right and the men who differ from him wrong; because he has always been correct before his superiors and nothing else; because, while other officers, whom I could mention, were busy with the fanfaronade and brass buttons and fancy ceremonies of garrison life, and were bent on getting their names and photographs in the papers, Petain was only pre-occupied with one thing—training his officers and training himself."

When an editor asked him for some account of his military career he sent back three dates and that was all. He has steadily refused to be photographed since the war; the only photograph I have of him comes from the Thirty-third Regiment book. He was urged to put his wonderful lectures at the Ecole de Guerre into book form, but he only replied: "What's the use?" Then his enemies said he was jealous of his ideas. And finally, when Ferdinand of Bulgaria decorated him for those same lectures, he put the decoration in his pocket. That's why Petain is unknown; because he has willed it. Even to-day he has asked the censor to cut out all mention of his name. But now he has got to be famous in spite of himself."

I suggested that, in short, General Petain might be the superman the allies needed. "Exactly; tactician, strategist, but, above all and to the last ounce in him, a fighter."

CANADA'S WAR HISTORY

Battalion Recalls Alliance Of Races at Queenston Heights

Col. Thompson of the 37th Haldimand Rifles raised an overseas battalion half of whites and half of Redskins and named it Brock's Rangers. Of this unique unit a correspondent wrote: The Rangers bear the appearance of a happy family of fighters. They appear so contented that Indians of other battalions in camp have applied for transfers to the 114th. The famous Corporal Thomas Longboat, asked to be transferred from the 180th (Sportsmen's) Battalion to the Rangers. Colonel Thompson's regiment had its own famous runner, however, in the person of Private Art Jamieson. "Many of the ancestors of the Indians in the 114th Battalion fought with our forbears at Queenston Heights," declared Colonel Thompson, in summing up a brief description of his unit. "It was necessary far us to seek a title for our battalion which was broad enough to cover the glorious past of both the white and red men. We therefore chose the name of 'Brock's Rangers.' Our battalion crest is supported by crossed tomahawks in recognition of the Indians."

Shop Or War Office?

A commercial traveller entered a shop in a certain North of England town the other day and asked for the senior partner. "Colonel—is not here to-day," came the reply. He then asked for the junior partner. "Major ——— is at the Front," was the firm response.

"Then can I see Mr. ———?" asked the traveller.

"Captain ——— is undergoing military training at the moment," chanted the responder. The traveller rubbed his eyes wearily. "Tell me,' he murmured, "am I in a draper's shop or the War Office?"

A Wonderful Hen

My hens are, no use, since I saw a piece in the Farm and Dairy that a hen laid three eggs in 23 1-2 hours, my friend Patrick will have to think another plan to beat that. Now I am living quite close to my friends of Ennismore nothing can be done, but I will know it, there is a English man named George working for Pat, one day they were not doing much, George says we might as well go for a rabbit hunt, off they went near by swamp they saw a rabbit, George says to Pat, why didn't you shoot, Pat, oh Begorra I did not see it till it got out of sight.

One day a few years ago (Pat and Mike I just forget now anyway), man and wife went to Peterborough the man is noted for his bad memory and in the evening the man got ready and went home without his better half, when he got near the house, the young ones run out to meet their good parents, one of them said, Pa, Pa, where is Ma, Ma. NINE PERISHED IN FIRE.

NEW YORK, Oct. 19.—Two more bodies were found yesterday in the fire-swept ruins of the Oakes Dye Manufacturing Company's plant in Queen's Borough, bringing the number of victims up to nine, six of them being women. They all apparently were overcome by acid fumes in trying to save the company's books. A ladder which fell and exploded some chemicals in bottles caused the fire.

THE SUMMER'S FIGHTING AS A NEUTRAL SEES IT

Germany Has Lost the Offensive and Lacks Reserve Power ---Temporary Gain---Germans Will Make Most of Roumanian Success, But It Weakens Them---The Foe Hoped For Peace---German Estimates Astray.

ENEMY LOSSES ARE HEAVY

NEW YORK, October 20.—The New York Tribune publishes the following article on "The Summer Campaign," by Frank H. Simonds:

Regard being had for weather conditions rather than for precise calendar divisions, it may now be fairly said that the end of the summer campaign in Europe has come. Two years ago, when the fighting in the west moved northward to Flanders, and the German invasion of Poland, in the east, approached, reached and then receded from the suburbs of Warsaw, there came that change in weather conditions which found such graphic portrayal in the war reports of the hour.

What, then, have been the results of this contest, of the most terrific phase of the great war in more than two years of its duration? And going still further afield, what has been the sum total of the year's operations, measured by such evidence as we have at hand?

FOE HOPED FOR PEACE.

The answer is not hard to find. The year 1916 opened as brilliantly for the central powers as any in the Napoleonic cycle for the French Emperor. The campaigns of 1915 had carried the victorious German hosts to the Dwina, the Pripet Marshes, and the frontiers of Eastern Galicia. German bulletins of a year ago forecast, at this very moment, a short Balkan campaign and then a victorious peace. The short Balkan campaign came to fill to overflowing the measure of German success, but the victorious peace is to-day, on the testimony of Berlin, quite as much as that of Paris or London, even remoter than a year ago.

It was then, with the purpose of dealing the final blow to France, that Germany opened in February that drive at Verdun which filled the press of the world for the next four months. But the drive failed. It cost Germany above half a million casualties, as against half as many for France; it resulted in the gain of a few square miles of French territory without military value. Seeking a decisive victory, Germany met with a terrible check, which was presently to cost the German commander who planned it his control of the German General Staff.

GERMAN ESTIMATES ASTRAY.

And with the coming of summer the attention of the world was suddenly turned to the Russian drive in the east. In the following weeks that Russia which in German estimates of the preceding fall had been eliminated from the war for years rolled up the whole Austrian line from the Styr to the Carpathians, overran all of the Bukowina and much of Eastern Galicia, took 400,000 prisoners and inflicted casualties which must have brought the butcher's bill for the Central Powers above 750,000. This was added to the 500,000 cost of the failure of Verdun. And, in addition, Russia remained Austrian territory with a greater area than the French territory held by Germany.

Then came the allied drive in the Somme, which is still going forward. Like the German attack upon Verdun, this has not resulted in more than a highly localized victory. It has not pierced the enemy lines. It has not freed France, and there is no present prospect that it will free French soil in any immediate time. But it has inflicted heavy losses upon the Germans, and it has revealed that at last the Germans have to reckon with the manhood of Britain as well as the male population of France and Russia. Twice as much territory has been won by the allies as was gained by the Germans at Verdun, more than twice as many cannon have been captured, and nearly twice as many prisoners taken.

ALLIES' LOSSES DOUBLE?

At the Somme the Germans have lost not less than 200,00, the allies about 400,000, accepting the ratio of Verdun, which gives every advantage in calculation to the Germans. Terrible pressure has been exerted and is being exerted upon the nation interior in numbers, already crippled by losses out of proportion to its resources. And to the Somme attack we have to add the Italian drive at Trieste, which took Gorizia, gathered up 80,000 prisoners, and inflicted very heavy losses upon the Austrians.

Since January 1 the central powers have lost not less than 1,750,000 men; of this number considerably more than half a million have been captured. Their losses in guns and material have been enormous, their loss in territory has been considerable.

Now, to balance this account what can be said for Germany? Allied success has brought a new nation into the war, involving a new strain upon German resources. This new nation has invaded an Austro-Hungarian province, but has now [illegible] having been heavily defeated. It also stands upon its own frontiers. It may possibly suffer from invasion. Here is a shining German success; but to win it Germany has had to employ reserves destined to act against her other enemies, and she stands, to this extent, in a weaker position. She has stopped a new foe, but the coming of the new foe has worsened her position palpably.

ENEMY HAS LOST.

In the larger sense, the summer campaign has ben wholly unfavourable to Germany. It has seen the loss of the offensive by her; it has seen the steady pounding upon all her fronts redoubled, it has seen a new foe brought into the field and a new strain put upon German resources. It has given to the enemies of Germany new assurances of victory, and it has disclosed them at last co-operating and co-ordinating their greatly superior resources in men and in money.

In our own Civil War 1864 was the most disappointing year of all for the North, because it was the year in which the victory that seemed assured after Gettysburg and Vicksburg in 1863 was not achieved despite the terrific sacrifices of Grant from the Rapidon to Cold Harbour. The policy of Grant, however, relentlessly applied and inexorably followed, did, as we see now, make the collapse of the spring of 1865 inevitable. Men who expected in 1864 that the victory would be won in that year were mistaken because they underestimated the power and resources of the South to resist, but they were only mistaken in degree, and what they believed would happen in 1864 did happen in 1865.

Beyond all question the present summer has been the worst period of the war for the Germans since the Marne, because it has seen the gradual rise in the strength and efficiency of the enemies, who were always bound to defeat Germany, because of their superior numbers, wealth, resources, if the war could be prolonged into a test of endurance. It has seen the Russians "come back" and the British "arrive."

A war between countries having a population in Europe of 300,000,000 and countries having a population of but 1,200,000,000—and this counts only the Great Powers—can have but one ending, if the issue turns upon endurance. If Germany's chances of winning the war in the first weeks in 1914 were far more than even, if they were still better than even last year, because the superior preparedness of the alliance possessing inferior ultimate resources still counted, the balance has already shifted heavily, the odds are now heavily on the allies.

JUST TEMPORARY SUCCESS.

German agents will make the most in Europe and here of the temporary and considerable success in Roumania. On the military side it is beyond praise, but it has in the longer view weakened, not helped, the central powers, because it has subjected them to new strain and made fresh demands upon their greatly inferior numbers.

It is not too much to say that with the ending of the summer campaign the certainty of German defeat is no longer to be mistaken. In the United States, for example, the conviction that Germany is going to lose has become wellnigh universal as a result of the past few months. We who have the Civil War as an illuminating parallel always before our own eyes, know how inevitable must be the outcome of any war which is fought under similar conditions, and we are seeing at last how similar the the conditions. Looking only at the neutral aspect, it is not an exaggeration to say that the summer campaign of 1916 has convinced the mass of Americans that, while the war may last for several years, the outcome is no longer in doubt, provided the alliance against Germany holds, and every sign points to such a holding.

AN OLD RECIPE TO DARKEN HAIR

Sage Tea and Sulphur Turns Gray, Faded Hair Dark and Glossy

Almost everyone knows that Sage Tea and Sulphur, properly compounded, brings back the natural color and lustre to the hair when faded, streaked or gray. Years ago the only way to get this mixture was to make it at home, which is mussy and troublesome.

Nowadays we simply ask at any drug store for "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound." You will get a large bottle of this old time recipe improved by the addition of other ingredients for about 50 cents. Everybody uses this preparation now, because no one can possibly tell that you darkened your hair, as it does it so naturally and evenly. You dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time, by morning the gray hair disappears, and after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully dark, thick and glossy and you look years younger. Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound is a delightful toilet requisite. It is not intended for the cure, mitigation or prevention of disease.

Dick Sheehy In Graduating Class of Dental Students

Dr. M. A. Morrison attended the special meeting in Toronto yesterday of the Directorate of the Royal College of Dental Surgeons. It was called to consider the results of the examinations for students attending the summer session held for the purpose of hastening the graduation of the two senior classes of the college, and thus freeing them for overseas work. Mr. Richard A. Sheehy of this city was a member of the Senior Class.

The Minister of Militia has telegraphed to the College that the Department would accept, as has been the rule, such of the graduates as might be required for the service, giving each upon confirmation the rank of Lieutenant. Pending confirmation the rank would be temporary or provisional for a couple of months. Sir Sam also congratulated the dental profession for the quality of men supplied for overseas work.

LOCAL SOLDIER HAS HAD SERIES OF ACCIDENTS

Pte. Leonard Clarke After Being Injured by a Shell in France Nearly Lost His Life When Hospital Ship Anglia Was Sunk in the Channel

IS INVALIDED HOME

After two as narrow escapes from death as a man could come through and yet live, and after long, weary months in an English hospital, Pte. Leonard Clarke, a Peterborough member of the 21st Canadian Battalion, 2nd Canadian Division, arrived home this morning to visit his friends on a short leave before entering the Convalescent Hospital at Kingston for further treatment. Pte. Clarke has had an arduous experience since leaving Peterborough in the autumn of 1914, and shows the effects in a crippled leg, which makes walking a difficult task.

Before the war broke out Pte. Clarke was employed as a teamster in Peterborough, and boarded at the home of Mr. R. Whatmuth, who then lived at 202 Edinburgh Street. The family now live on Donegal Street, where Pte. Clarke is visiting them for a few days.

Pte. Clarke was a member of No. 4 Company of the 57th Regiment before the war, and enlisted in September, 1914, with the local quota for the 21st Battalion. He was a member of the military police of the 21st for some time, and went to the front as a member of No. 2 Company. He was in the trenches for about two months until a German shell put an end to his military career on November 4th. The German artillery made practically a direct hit on the dug-out in which Pte. Clarke was, and the structure collapsed, burying its occupants. Pte. Clarke was struck in the back by one of the timbers, and as a result his spine was injured.

Adventure No. 2 came later. The Peterborough soldier was removed to hospital, and afterwards sent to England. The ship on which he left France was the ill-fated hospital ship "Anglia," which struck a mine in the Channel and went down on November 17th, 1915, thirty Canadian soldiers losing their lives, the number including Pte. Geo. Curson, a Peterborough member of the 2nd Battalion. Pte. Clarke was below when the accident happened, and was carried on deck on a stretcher. He managed to get hold of a life preserver, and got over the side some way with a rope—he hardly knows how. He was rescued after being twenty minutes in the water.

Since that time Pte. Clarke has been in hospital in England. It is expected that he will have to remain in the Kingston hospital from three to six months. He returns to Kingston a week from Monday.

Martial Music Woke Up George St. This Morning When 155th Band Headed the First Marchout of 247th Battalion

TO-DAY'S MILITARY NEWS

The strains of martial music around the business section of the city this morning when the band of the 155th Battalion, headed the first marchout of the 247th Battalion. Bandmaster E. R. Hinchey and his musicians, thirty strong, arrived on the 9 o'clock G.T.R. train last evening and will be attached to the 247th until further notice—an announcement that will be received with great pleasure by the citizens generally, and especially by those who heard them play this morning and were most favourably impressed with the organization.

The band was organized by the 155th Battalion of Belleville, but instead of accompanying the battalion overseas was retained by headquarters at Kingston as a base band for recruiting purposes, a tribute to the fine showing the band made at Barrie field during the summer. It was considered one of the finest organizations in camp and a treat is before the people of Peterborough, provided the authorities decide to prolong the stay of the band here. On this point there is no information to-day, but it will be here for a visit of some length it is thought.

Sergt. G. E. Dobbs, Ptes. A. Ayling, B. L. Bell, R. W. Burke, F. J Burke, J. C. Cordes, J. Cookson, M. S. Fraser, S. Houghton, G. McGuire, E. C. Moynes, W. J. Mitts, M. W. Parks, A. W. Rowland, J. F. Shunk, F. W. Sills, H. Stanley, D. Sword, H. A. Thompson, H. C. Wallace, A. Warren, W. A. Weyerark, Corp. J. S Wewmark, Ptes. F. W. Wilkinson, W. G. Womacott, T. Swanta, R. J. Beatty, E. Rounds.

Four other members of the band Ptes. H. H. Berkley, J Brooks, D. Brown and W. L. Rolf who are on furlough will report later.

The members of the band are being billeted throughout the city and are occupying the recreation room of the Armouries for rehearsals. This room was used by the band of the 93rd Battalion for the same purpose.

RECRUITING MEETING

The first recruiting meeting in the interests of the 247th Battalion will be held in the Armouries on Sunday night at 8.30 o'clock. The new band will be on hand to provide an attractive programme of music while sparkling addresses are expected from Major G. Campbell and Capt. H. B Keaney of the district recruiting staff, two well-known and very effective speakers. It is expected that there will be a big crowd present on Sunday evening.

PETERBORO' MEN HAVE ARRIVED FROM OVERSEAS

Members of the 93rd Battalion Sent Home From England Reach the City —Several Other Soldiers From Other Units Home

OTHERS ARE COMING

Last evening and this morning witnessed the home-coming of a number of Peterborough soldiers from overseas, the majority of them being members of the 93rd Battalion, sent home because they were not considered old enough or robust enough to face the hardships of the trenches. The quota should have all arrived on the special C. P. R. train which reached here shortly after six o'clock last evening, but a number missed the train when they got off at Smith's Falls, and did not get home until this morning.

The result was there were a number of disappointed mothers and relatives at the C.P.R. Station last evening. Comparatively few people knew that the soldiers were coming in. Ald. Edgar, City Clerk Armstrong, City Engineer Parsons, Fire Chief Howard and other city officials were at the station last night to meet the boys, however, and they were taken to their homes in motor cars.

The 93rd men who returned were:
Pte. Joseph Losey, Water St North.
Pte R Mitchell, Jr.
Pte R Edwards.
Pte. Willis.
Pte. S Degen
Pte. Paquette.
Pte. W. Jackson
Pte W Duncan
Bugler W. McGee
Pte I. Vincent.
Pte. T Hele.

Practically all these soldiers were under age, but they were reluctant to return, especially as the majority left relatives with the overseas forces. For instance, Pte Mitchell's father and brother went over with the 93rd Pte Hele's father and two brothers

COMMITTEE APPOINTED

Without the Services and Devotion of the British Sailor Canada Would Have Been at the Mercy of a Relentless Enemy—Stirring Address by Mr. M. P. Fennell at Last Night's Public Meeting

Canada's indebtedness to the British Empire and the sea forces that have made possible the almost total elimination from the high seas, of enemy trade and commerce, and which has preserved to the British Empire and her allies, the freedom of the seven seas, was brought home last evening to a representative gathering of citizens that foregathered in the Council Chamber. The speaker was Mr. M. P. Fennell, of Montreal, and his mission in Peterborough was to arouse local and practical interest in the British Sailors' Relief Fund. H. R. H. the Duke of Connaught, is patron of this Fund, while the Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario, Sir John Hendrie, is patron of the fund for the province, and has promised every assistance for the formation of branches in each city. The committee in charge of the work in Canada have for their objective so far as the Dominion is concerned, the sum of five hundred thousand dollars. To date the following amounts have been subscribed or promised: Montreal $155,000, British Columbia $25,000, Alberta $60,000, Saskatchewan $30,000, Prince Edward Island $12,000, New Brunswick $11,000, and Nova Scotia, $14,000.

THE NET RESULT.

Last night's meeting opened with the appointment of Ald. William Langford as secretary. The net result of the meeting was the appointment of a committee which will undertake the formation of a permanent organization to represent the Fund in Peterborough. The committee comprises the following: His Worship Mayor J. J Duffus, Aldermen A. A. McIntyre, Wm. Langford, Messrs. J. A. Aylmer, W. H. Dunsford, F. D. Kerr and V. Eastwood.

This committee was formed at the suggestion of Mr. Aylmer, who took occasion to assure Mr. Fennell that every effort would be made to assist in such a worthy cause.

Mr. F. D. Kerr said it was difficult for people living so far inland to realize the dangerous and necessary work that is being performed on the high seas in such an obscure form. He thought that Peterborough might well respond to such a worthy object.

His Worship Mayor Duffus, upon introducing Mr. Fennell, took occasion to comment upon the hazardous calling that characterizes a sailor's life and expressed the hope that the speaker's visit to Peterborough would be followed by an adequate response.

MR. M. P. FENNELL.

Mr Fennell, after a few preliminary remarks, said: "It is difficult to arouse the people and stir them to activity for other in things they do not see or feel or which do not touch with sense directness their sensibilities. These things which are unseen or are more remote will move the people when a direct appeal is made to their sentiments and common sense. For the past two years we have been accustomed almost daily to the sight of marching battalions, to the sound of the bugle call and the roll of the drum.

Family Privations.

We see our citizen soldiers entrained for service overseas amid homes, and sometimes the tears of loved ones whose hearts are sore; we see some of them returning disabled and sick from wounds or hardship of the war, we see families suffering privations because of their hero supporters being dead, or still fighting on in the great struggle for human freedom, and so we are moved to sympathy and willing to contribute to patriotic, red cross and disabled soldiers funds.

Remote to Us.

But in Canada, apart from the Maritime Provinces, we do not know the ocean or its meaning, and do not appreciate at his true value the sailor who keeps its pathway free or brings to destination our seaborne traffic. There are little in our thoughts; they are remote to us, and it is for that reason that I crave your indulgence for a few minutes during which time I will say a little regarding the men who man the British Navy and the Mercantile Marine, and the considerations which lead to the establishments of the British Sailors' Relief Fund in Canada.

A Sure Shield.

CONGRATULATIONS.

The Montreal Herald yesterday October 19th celebrated its 106th year of publication and public service. On Saturday, October 19th 1811, the Herald first saw the light and it has since been seeing the light—the right kind of light—the beacon of Liberal principles, applied to national government and individual and national betterment. The Herald is to be congratulated on enjoying a hale old age—it occupies what is claimed as the "finest and most commodious newspaper building in Canada, and its pages are evidence of intellectual activity and enterprise. Here's to a continuation of its present prosperity and popularity with the public.

PRAISE OF CANADA IMPOSES ANOTHER DUTY.

At the farewell dinner to the Duke of Daversire, our future governor general in London Canada came in for a good round of praise. Sir William Robinson, chief of the Imperial army staff, spoke in the highest terms of what Canadian troops have done. We are grateful for this tribute, from one who knows, to the valour of Canadian soldiers and the effectiveness of their service in the field. We are proud of this praise as we are proud of our soldiers. While we are gratified, we are not surprised. We expected much from our soldiers and we have got much; but after all they have only done their duty.

However, does the praise of our soldiers belong to the rest of Canada? Are we home-stayers doing our full duty in patting our soldiers on the back. Have we otherwise stood by them as we might have done; as we should have done? What we at home have done, has had little of the merit, that comes from such sacrifices as our soldiers have made and are making. Have we done our full duty in voting moneys and contributing to funds to be employed in helping our soldiers? We have done nothing comparable to what our soldiers boys have done to reflect credit and glory upon Canada. We can and should do much now in doing their duty and winning glory for Canada, Canadian troops have suffered and laid down their lives; they need help, they need more soldiers to fill the thinned and thinning ranks; they cannot keep the pace without being strengthened in numbers.

And here is where the chief of the Imperial Army Staff points out the present duty of Canadians. He said in relation to the war that "it has taken two years to begin, and we have begun well and are now in the middle stage".

"Don't ask" he said, "when the end will be. Let us centre our thoughts and efforts upon the middle, and the end will look after itself".

Let us at home look after the middle stage—the present. There is more need for more Canadian soldiers in Europe. There are thousands of young men in Canada that are in duty bound—doubly bound—to come to the front, and—go to the front. In the first place these young men are sharing the credit of the valour of Canadian young manhood under false conditions—they have done nothing to win the credit given, and they can only claim credit when they, being then, it is a matter of manhood help and rescue of the hard fighting Canadians, who are winning bullets and glory for Canada as a whole. This is the testing time of young Canadians. We need at least 140,000 more soldiers and the young men now at home must supply them, and will do so, if they are worthy of their manhood. It is not a noble thing in any sphere of life, or action, to leave a chum or comrade in the lurch. Now then that it is a matter of manhood and high principle to ready to see that the lives Canadians have laid down, that the wounds they have suffered shall not be wasted—through lack of support, to enable them, as part of the armies of the Empire and the allies to push the fight to victory. There's a world of meaning and a wealth of nobleness in the words of Abraham Lincoln, after the battle of Gettysburg, where the earth was strewn with the gallant dead:—

"Let us here highly resolve that these dead shall not have died in vain."

CANADA FOR CANADIANS.

Why is it that private enterprise is more resourceful than governments? Why is it that a private individual or business corporation will do things while governments wait and hesitate? The Welland Telegraph states that work has begun on the big International Nickel Company plant at Port Colbourne with the probability that the four million dollar plant will be completed and in operation before the government has turned the first sod on the proposed government Nickel Refining plant. There is urgency in both cases. The private company wants to begin work as soon as possible for the profit in it. The government should push its work promptly to prevent the supply of Canadian Nickel to the enemy. There is now, no doubt, that the pressure, brought by Sir Robert Cecil has led the International Nickel Company to establish the Port Colbourne plant. Sir Robert recently stated that the under-sea freighter Deutschland took a cargo of 700 tons of pure Canadian nickel from Newport News to Germany. There is no doubt that this nickel was mined in Canada and transported, under the unpatriotic arrangement made by the Ottawa government to a foreign country to be refined, and that it found its way to Germany to be used as destructive ammunition against our own soldiers. The claim by do-nothing government officials that the agreement existing between the Canadian government and the foreign nickel company, absolutely prevents any Canadian nickel getting to Germany is discredited, and still the government does not act, though there is abundant evidence that our nickel is finding, and has been finding, its way to Germany ever since the war began, as it is known and acknowledged it was doing before in quantities, that permitted of storing against the day when the supply would be more difficult to get.

"If there is any serious intention behind the government proposal to erect a two-million dollar plant in Canada, so that our own nickel may be refined as well as mined in this country, there should be some little evidence of action. While the government is hesitating, the International Nickel Company of New Jersey, which is making millions out of Canada's nickel, to thousands made by Canada, will probably have its four million dollar plant in operation, before the government gets its bearings for a beginning.

Then technically Canadian nickel will be refined in Canada; but unless the government in some way secures control of the output, the International Company will be as free as ever to dispose of our nickel in a way that will serve the demands of the enemy. On the face of it the understating of the company with the government—that no Canadian nickel should be supplied to Germany and that the company must exact a similar understanding in the case of every sale is valueless. If this understanding is not complied with and our nickel, as it does, finds its way to Germany, what is the remedy? None only citing again an ineffective understanding.

The only safe way is the absolute control of all Canadian nickel by the Canadian government and the only safe and sure way to effect that is to refine our nickel at home under strict government control. This would be the beginning of a policy, that would be the making of the country—that none of our national resources, capable of such treatment should be allowed to leave the country in an unmanufactured condition. By such a policy Canada would get the fullest benefit in the employment of labour, capital and the accessory industries. Canada for the Canadians, and Canadian nickel for Britain and her allies alone should be the government policy—and practice.

Interesting Letter From Pte. Callander

Germans Show a Willingness to Surrender When They See the Cold Steel Coming

The following interesting letter is from Private L. Callander, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Callander, 515 Weller street. Pte. Callander was a former employee of the Examiner.

The letter reads as follows:

Dear Father and Mother.— I am once more out of the trenches, and glad to be alive without a scratch. This time I was in a charge on the Germans and we took the trenches that we went after. Quite a lot of fellows got it going over from our trenches to the Germans. I didn't have the pleasure of using my bayonet on any Germans for they either beat it or surrendered with hands up, saying, "Mercy comrade." You would never have believed it if you didn't see them do it. Some of them put up a scrap though. They had an officer standing over them with a revolver, and as soon as we killed the officer, the men surrendered, but most of that bunch were killed. They had been throwing bombs at us, and one fell in a shell hole that I was shooting from, but it didn't explode, which was lucky for me, for if it had I would have been killed most likely. I noticed one or two poor fellows topple over right beside me, but I ran safely through everything. You will likely see in the papers of the charge of the 2nd and how they were cut up in it. Well I was in that charge. Quite a lot of honour was heaped upon us for it. The British said we could not take the trench, but we showed them, and afterwards they said we were regular devils to scare the Germans like we did. It was a success all through. Some Germans had their underclothing off looking for vermin, and it was funny to see how scared they looked. They expected no mercy from Canadians, but we took a lot of prisoners. We were in the trenches eleven days, not always at the front line, but always under shell fire in reserve trenches.

Well I am glad to be out alive, and I guess you will be glad to hear it too. Your second box just came in right, and say, the candy was great. I have a piece in my mouth now, as you see they reached me all right. I got quite a lot of mail when I got out. I guess the war will last all winter, but I wish I could walk home for Christmas, don't you?

I want to tell you that a fellow never thinks of himself in a charge.

Lynn.

Writing again, after another term in the trenches, he says:

Dear F., M., and Sister.—Here I am again, out of the trenches with my sore and tired feet, but otherwise feeling good. We are sleeping in comfy dugouts, that is where we go when we leave the trenches, and it is not a bad place to sleep either. A fellow always feels a great relief when he comes back from the trenches, out of danger for a change. The Canadians have been doing great work in France lately, as you may hear. We did not go after the Germans this time, but were on the front line. We were told we were heroes for bringing our wounded under shell fire. It is awful hard work to carry a wounded man on a stretcher out of the trenches. A man is pretty heavy, but you are glad to help the poor fellows out so they can get to the hospital for proper treatment. I can see war now in earnest. There is only Sandy Scotland and myself of No. 3 draft that came over from the 35th left. What bothers me worst is that you will be worrying about me, and I don't want you to, but enough news about how things are going. The weather is fine and when we are going any place, or going into the trenches, I guess it is a long time since you got a letter from me, but I can't help it as we are not always allowed to send them. When we get out of the trenches we get paid, and spend every cent on something to eat. Say, I got your parcels all right, and both came just handy, just as I came out of the trenches.

I would like to go camping next summer and just rest, that is the way I feel just now. . . Your mail comes pretty regular now. I got the last letters while living in an old German dug-out, away down in the ground about 20 feet. They put a lot of work on them as though they never expected to be driven out, but the British drove them out all right, just the same. Some have all kinds of furniture in them and electric lights and lots of booze to drink. They used to live high I can tell you, and had to get out in a hurry when they went—

High Paper Prices And Forest Fires

Effect of Defective Forest Fire Protection in Increasing Cost of Manufacture and Prices

Independent of other causes operating to increase the price of paper to Canadian publishers, the constant destruction of spruce and balsam forests by preventable fires has played a serious role. Without question there is abundance of woods to meet all demands of paper mills, but abundance and accessibility are frequently two very different things. Transportation distances between the woods and the mills is a factor of first importance and accessibility are frequently dear and American paper mills have been forced to realize. Every addition al mile a paper mill is obliged to travel for logs, the costs of the paper product will reflect an advance.

E. H. Peckes, President of the Minnesota and Ontario Paper Co., at Fort Frances, Ont., stated recently that the increasing inaccessibility of pulp limits from the mills is making paper dearer. Unlike small saw mills, the permanently located pulp mill can not pack up its equipment and follow the retreating forest. Forest engineers are agreed, however, that with care in operating limits and thorough protection against fire, pulpwood forests can be perpetuated indefinitely; accessibility of supplies need be lessened very little.

Up to the present stage in Canada the lac . . modern fire protection for which the Governments, as trustees of the timber resources, are chiefly responsible has reduced the near-at-hand bodies of pulp wood far more than the actual cut of logs. The Northern Ontario fires of last summer are an illustration of this fact. In the 1,200 square miles devastated were substantial quantities of paper making materials. In the same fire an Ontario paper company lost 400,000 cords of wood, ready piled in the mill yard. Quebec's 1916 fires also cleared out large quantities of spruce and balsam as well as white pine. The forest fires record in Ontario and Quebec during the past ten years accounts for vastly more forest wealth than has passed into lumber and pulp.

If the pulp areas at the mill door are allowed to disappear in flames, the longer drive or rail haul automatically increases the cost of manufacture. Without doubt, other causes than unheeded fires are at the root of the paper price advances in war time, but it remains true that since the first paper factory in Canada began to operate, the fire fiend has been laying his tax on the paper consumer. —Forestry Association.

This Company is earning its Preferred dividend more than three times over. The market for the goods is many times the production and the proceeds of the sale of stock will be used to increase the plant in order to meet rapidly increasing demand for the Company's products.

We recommend this as being among the best offerings we have ever made—all of which have proved profitable to investors.

CANADA'S INDEBTEDNESS TO THE SEA FORCES

King George to Admiral Jellicoe at the very outset of the war, in which His Majesty expressed the hope that the Royal Navy would once again prove itself the sure shield of Britain and her Empire. Any arguments of mine would certainly be altogether unnecessary with Canadian people to show that the Royal Navy has proved itself our sure shield, and I have learned in organizing branches of the British Sailors' Relief Fund in all the cities of the Dominion during the past two months, that the citizens of Canada, with those of the rest of the Empire are realising more and more with each hour that passes, how immeasurable is the debt we owe to the brave sailors who have held the seas during the last two years. Not only have they kept the shores of England free from invasion, but they have bottled the enemy's fleet in the seclusion of the Kiel Canal—have maintained the freedom of the seas for all the allied nations and have made possible the transportation of troops, munitions and merchandise from all parts of the earth.

Desperate Battles.

The desperate battles fought in the South Pacific, the South Atlantic, at the Dogger Banks and off Jutland; the irresistible pressure placed upon the enemy's commerce the world over; the wonderful defence against the submarine terror, and all exploits of the British Navy in which we have gloried, but we have taken them as a matter of course. Nothing more was expected, for we have been taught to look upon the officers and men of the British Navy as the bravest and most efficient of men —our "sure shield" against all foreign aggression.

With the exception of a few raids on the English Coast and the killing of civilians, women and children, only once has the German Navy ventured to test the supremacy of our own. Sir David Beatty, in the Jutland battle, took the responsibility—for such is the tradition in the British Navy—in going forth with his six cruisers to meet the overpowering strength of the enemy's fleet, consisting of 20 vessels, with the result that victory was vouchsafed, although Beatty in acting as he did, had no hope of winning, but he was ready to sacrifice his vessels in order to give Jellicoe's matchless fleet a chance to arrive. When Beatty's fleet had numbered no more than 10 ,the Germans scuttled back to cover.

One More Hour.

But as Sir Robert Borden stated on the occasion of the seconde anniversary of the war: "What would not Jellicoe and Beatty have given for one additional hour of daylight, which would have made that victory complete for all time." The Germans were given a decisive thrashing by only a small part of the fleet, and their spite has since been shown by that outrageous murder of the magnificent and brave merchant seaman, Captain Fryatt.

The question uppermost in the minds of the sailors in the North Sea to-day is: "Will Von Scheer make another sortie?" The Fleet is waiting and ready, and readiness in the British Navy means readiness, and should the German High Seas Fleet leave Kiel, they will find waiting the encounter, Beatty's Lion, Tiger and Warspite, reported by the Germans at the time of the battle to be sunk daily for a week.

The Silent Navy.

Aside from the work of the silent Navy, few Canadians, if any, realized what demands would be made, in war time, upon the mercantile marine and upon the quiet fisher-folk who came and went upon their lawful occasions to and from every little haven in the British Isles— and fewer still could have visualized, before the war the deeds that these men have since performed. They have kept their ships upon the main, though every man might bide the death that floats by night and day, in order that the commerce of the Empire might not stay its course, and that the Empire's [illegible] upon their way. They [illegible] every danger of wind and [illegible] and submarine,—to clear [illegible] of Glasgow.—[illegible] done under the inspiration of great traditions, in the company of hundreds of men similarly inspired, and backed by the greatest offensive forces that man has devised, but done in small boats with few companions amid swirling seas and chilling gales.

We Have Failed.

While we Canadians have given unstinted praise to the work performed by these men, is it not a fact that we have failed, in our appreciation of what that work has meant to us? Have we realized at all clearly, that if the fighting of our brave sailors had been less efficient, in all probability the "Hun" would now be master of the world and our women and children would be subjected to the worst horrors of warfare, such as were inflicted upon the poor Belgians, whose only offence was that they refused to sell their honour. Had it not been for the effective work performed by the Grand Fleet, just two years ago, troops from Germany would certainly have landed in France and Belgium, and before realized, the foe would have become properly embedded in the greatest of strategic positions.

Spirit of Freedom.

Have we at all realized that were the Navy not as efficient as it has proved itself, not only would our position in the war have been far more precarious and uncertain, but the advantage that we possess in being able to freely ship our food products and munitions to Great Britain and the Allies would not have existed? In other words the material prosperity we all enjoy in the Dominion to-day depends almost altogether on the supremacy of the seas held by our navy at such tremendous cost of life. These men could have said with Richard Granville's sailors, "We have children we have wives," but they did not. They have kept the trade routes of the world open to Canada, enabling us to reach unmolested the markets of the world, and to import from other countries what we cannot ourselves raise, but which are so necessary to increased production and to the comforts of life. The value to us of these is shown by the condition of Germany to-day. In arrogance and self-sufficiency it shook its mailed first in the face of justice, of truth and kindliness, lifted up its hand against established nations, small and great, and with cruel heart yelled its prayer—"Gott strafe England." It is now suffering and will suffer. I will not say its punishment, but the natural consequences of its rebellion against the laws of humanity. It is falling into the pit it dug for others. It considered Britain unprepared, and it did fully ready. For long years the spirit of the people of the British Empire was trained and prepared for freedom and for justice so that it would not brook enslavement. For years the sailors were trained for mastery, and the navy and fleet prepared in efficiency to maintain that spirit of freedom.

Was Not Prepared.

England was not prepared to fight on Flanders' fields. It is no neglect to be complimented in things which [illegible] but the Navy was prepared, [illegible] preparedness has

RICHARD HALL & SON LIMITED

Mayor Duffus Was Speaker

Peterboro's Chief Magistrate on the Deputation Which Waited on Government in Regard to High Cost of Living

A LARGE DELEGATION

OTTAWA, Oct. 19.— The House of Commons chamber this morning was filled by a large representative delegation from various parts of the east, who gathered to urge upon the government the necessity of some measures for the regulation of the cost of living. The delegates comprised a heavy representation from Toronto and other Ontario cities, together with representatives of organized labour, the National Council of Women and other bodies. The government was represented by Hon. Robert Rogers, Hon. T. Chase Casgrain, Hon. C. J. Doherty and Hon. T. J. Crothers.

Mayor Church of Toronto, in introducing the delegation, declared that the municipalities had given gaited and hearty support to the government toward the war and they did not desire that the present delegation came with any idea of criticism. Something they believed, should be done to regulate the prices of food in war time.

Hon. T. J. Crothers declared that advance in prices in Canada had been less marked than the advance in any other belligerent country. Prices had advanced 17.2 per cent. in Canada. In the United Kingdom they had advanced 65 per cent.

Mayor Duffus of Peterborough, declared that the municipalities had no machinery with which to deal with the situation. They could see the prices advance and might have their idea as to a reason, but they had no means of dealing with such advances. They believed the government could provide the necessary machinery and control.

Every Time You Break the Gates You Get a Cigar

On Wednesday the G.T.R. gate on Charlotte street was once more repaired and last night another automobile ran into it, slightly wrenching it and leaving it in need of further attention. Mr. McNab has the number of the car and will send the owner a bill for repairs. He didn't know his name to-day, but will look it up in the meantime.

The city pays a share of the maintenance of the gates and Mr. McNab believes that some steps should be taken to discourage the thoughtless approach of motor drivers who display the mood that every time they break the gates they get a cigar. But the situation has come to the point where there must be a change. Mr. MacNab states, and something really effective may be expected by future "Hints at the gates."

Wheat Jumps The $1.70 Mark

Special to The Examiner:

CHICAGO, Oct. 20.—Wheat jumped over the $1.70 mark to-day, and reached the highest figure since the Civil War, with the exception of the high level in Leiter Corner in 1898. An hour after opening to-day December wheat sold at 171 7-8 and May at 170 3-8. Later there was a recession. Grain men freely predicted two dollar wheat within a few weeks. Canadian wheat has been snowed under, reports say, and may not get a market this season.

WINNIPEG, Oct. 20.—It is reported that all grain contracts in Manitoba have been taken over by the British Government. This may account for the rise in price in Chicago.

English M.P. Fined

Examiner Special:

LONDON, Oct. 20.—Joseph King, a Liberal member of the House of Commons for North Somerset, appeared in the Bow Street Police Court to-day, charged with sending a false report to the United States that German airships had destroyed twenty-five million dollars worth of Allies ammunition. This report was wirelessed all over the world from Berlin. King pleaded not guilty.

The defence produced a letter written by King to War Secretary Lloyd George, expressing regret that he had written such a letter. He was released with a $500 fine.

BATTERY WOULD WINTER HERE

The city is in receipt of a communication from Captain Roy, of the Canadian Field Artillery, Petawawa, asking for information concerning the prospects of winter accommodation in Peterborough for a battery of men and horses. A battery comprises about one hundred and fifty men.

The only apparent difficulty in wintering a battery here would be the question of stable accommodation for horses. A committee, consisting of Aldermen Weir, Edgar, and Langford, will look into the matter at once with a view of providing the necessary accommodation.

LITTLE GIRLS GAVE A QUILT

Jam and Linen Shower Held at the Protestant Home Was a Successful Event

The jam and linen shower held at the Peterborough Protestant Home on Wednesday was a very great gratifying success. Over one hundred jars of fruit being received besides flannelette blankets, towels, dresser scarfs, etc. One gift that was much appreciated was a quilt beautifully pieced by seven little girls belonging to the Busy Bee Club of Knox church. The little girls themselves presented the quilt and afterwards sang a chorus.

During the afternoon Mrs. Sanderson and Mrs. Porter furnished instrumental music and Miss Middleton contributed a solo. The tea room was in charge of Miss Flora Davidson and Miss Sara Robinson assisted by Miss Gertrude Allison, Miss Margaret Hall and Miss M. Elliott.

Conscription, Why Not?

Editor of the Examiner:

In view of the fact that the average of casualties are 1,000 per day, how will the shortage be made up that results from such when eligibles refuse to do their duty. I say this from the present appearance of military strength and of those who still shirk in any way possible for answering the call, not only of Country, but of comrades falling, who repeatedly ask the question When will we get reinforcements? They are not coming by request or by urging as nine out of every ten will make an excuse such as a yellow cur would not attempt to give for itself. Can they not understand the methods of the British army. More men and more men, means less men lost or hurt as numbers man strength and the strength can and will be such that it will surround the Hun hordes and starve them out and not a shot need be fired to dislodge them. This is one of the best methods of compelling an enemy to surrender, shortage is no fulfillment of duty at present and it rests with the mufti clad manhood of this country to eliminate such, as well as others who have done as well if not better than we have by far. I overheard the following between a soldier and a young eligible civilian yesterday: Come—take your place. Answer, my cousin is enough and I'll not go till I have to, my home and pleasures are too good to let go, buy the other fellow he might be a succor. Now what would such a poor excuse with a man's clothes on do if he had to face a big beast, such as those who have dishonoured and destroyed France and Belgium, and it is plain that he could not be able to help of his own volition and would have to be driven to his duty like a dirty Hun, shame on such counterfeit manhood when the same young man long ago stood beside a girl at the C.P.R. station and when the boys were leaving to go to Valcartier and Kingston exclaimed: Their best place is in —— as I would not be in their company, nor travel with them.

Many of those lads have fallen, others are wounded while he stays here, still not fit to dust the shoes of those he looked down on.

In the name of common sense, how can a girl see anything in a poor coward like this, yet they are seen together and others like them, as they can be counted by hundreds on our streets every evening. He is not married, nor should not be as an interment camp would be the best place to put him. That which he and others give as excuses for shirking just helps others to follow their examples. He does not work, living on his parents and can be found in company that those who have gone to do their duty would scorn the thought of being found with.

The following might help him to understand that soon he may be forced to take his place. Male British subjects can be called upon if not disqualified and outside of Canada can be drafted by government order. Following exempted:

Men between 20-44 married or widowers with no children; 18-44 married or widowers with children; married men between 45-60 they can be taken in classes as mentioned. So where does a young vigorous unmarried man get a look in from exemption in any of the four classes stated.

Any person exempted can be called upon to serve if necessary. Let our young men beware or one of these days it will be necessary to enforce the full measure of rights and where will the slackers be as ribbon selling, window dressing, dry goods, salesmen, grocery clerks, bank clerks or office chair warmers can be compelled to fall in at a needed hour, where can a sissy boy be but put in his place when wanted.

By all means let come conscription come and a squad pick up those who have made excuses while the real manhood of our country has answered the call and showed where a man's place is when duty asks for followers and toe the mark as they will not unless forced to do so.

RECRUITING ACTIVITIES

District Headquarters Say That Efforts Must Be Carried On in the Strongest Possible Manner

MEN BADLY NEEDED

Recruiting Activities.

Certain reports have been received at Militia Headquarters to the effect that recruiting efforts are no longer being actively carried on by either Military or civilian organizations under the misapprehension that this is not necessary in view of expected changes in connection with recruiting.

The authorities at Militia Headquarters have issued instructions to all District Commanders, that the recruiting efforts be carried on in the strongest possible manner.

There are, at the present time in all districts, a number of units which are not yet up to strength, and every effort is to be made to bring these units to their full establishment.

There are also urgent requirements for Engineers and Signallers, Telegraph Operators, and Linesmen to fill the drafts called for from drafts of these services.

In every branch of the service vacancies still exist for men, and recruiting must be carried on continuously if success is to attend the Allies' cause.

It is not intended or contemplated that any change in organization for recruiting should destroy existing methods, but rather materially assist such efforts.

The Militia Department desires that recruiting efforts should not be slackened, that Recruiting Leagues and Patriotic Associations should continue the splendid work they have done in the past and that every man should take part in the campaign in the way which he believes to be best, and for which he is most suited.

Brig.-General T. D. B. Hemming, the General Commanding the District, and Major G. I. Campbell, Chief Recruiting Officer of the District, both of whom may be addressed at Kingston, Ont., are always prepared to give their advice and counsel to any Association, Leagues, or other parties requiring assistance in determining the manner in which their activities should be conducted.

H. R. Wilson,
Lieut.-Colonel.
D.A.A., and Q.M.G. Military District No. 3.

Mrs. L. Smith Is Bereaved

Mrs. Leonard Smith, 617 Chamberlen Street, wife of Pte. Leonard Smith, a Peterborough member of the 25th Battalion, formerly of the [illegible], has received word that her brother, Lance-Corp. W. Linley, of the King's Royal Rifles, has been killed in action. Lance-Corp. Linley was twice before wounded. He was twenty-seven years of age.

Mrs. Smith's husband, who enlisted here with the 39th, is the only Peterborough member left with the 25th to which a dozen local soldiers were drafted. The other eleven have been either killed or wounded.

Strike Is Imminent

(SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER)

WINNIPEG, Oct. 19.— A strike of Canadian Pacific trainmen over the entire system seems immigent. Eastern and far western delegates to the peace conference have returned home and some of the officials announce that a strike will be called for Wednesday next at 5 p.m. Grant Hall, C.P.R. manager, said, however, that this decision was not final.

Was Buried Under Timber At Front

Pte. R. L. Butcher Badly Bruised But Not Seriously Hurt

Mrs. R. L. Butcher, 486 Bonaccord street received the following letter a short time ago from her husband who enlisted at Napanee with the 77th Ottawa Battalion and has been in France over a year:—

September 18, 1916

Dear Wife.—Just a line to let you know I am in the hospital, but I am not very badly hurt. I was buried under a big piece of timber and hurt my back pretty badly, but I have no wounds. I expect to be back up the line in a couple of weeks. I am in the American hospital in France and they use us fine. We sure had a great scrap with Fritz and he is a proper coward. I suppose you have seen about the Canucks in the paper. I think we had pretty good luck, and took lots of prisoners. I have been down two days now, but this is the first I felt like writing. I got Mrs. Miller's box a couple of hours before we went into action. I got a letter from you, but don't know whether I answered it or not. I suppose you will get word about me long before you get this letter. Well there is not much I can tell you only not to worry as I will soon be O.K. again and hope you are all the same. From your loving husband.

Heavy Piano Sales Typify the Times

That good times are being enjoyed by the people of this city and surrounding districts is clearly manifested in the increased sales of pianos. Mr. Archie Barbeau of the Peterborough Fuel and Transfer Company remarked to-day that they had experienced decided inclinations in that respect averaging six or seven pianos a day from the local dealers to purchasers in the city and country. Last Saturday the Transfer Company handled ten pianos. They were not all new ones. Some were simply being moved from one place to another, but the day's work maintained the average of new instruments distributed to local homes. If a piano weighs 1,500 pounds, that day's lifting aggregated 160,000 lbs.

STRAND THEATRE

Presents a programme of fine features shown for the first time in Canada, at Lowe's Toronto Theatre, in the first part of this week. The Films produced by this company are absolutely non-inflammable, but, on this account they are unusually thick and dense, consequently, in order to have them show up clear, they require a much stronger light than ordinary films. At first, we did not know this, and the result was a rather dark picture. The defect has been remedied, and the result, owing to the Pathe Co.'s orginal method of treating their films, is a picture of unusual distinctness. The facial expressions and movements of the actors, are brought out in a way that gives them a startling natural appearance. See to-day's special Feature— A BOLT FROM THE SKY."

PETERBORO' MEN HAVE ARRIVED

are overseas. Bugler McGee's father and brother are on the other side of the Atlantic with the Canadian forces, as is Pte. Degen's father, Lance-Corp. Frank Degen. The boys report that a number of other men rejected from the 83rd will arrive home shortly. The majority of the 83rd had gone to France before the returning soldiers left for home.

A Sad Home-Coming.

It was a sad home-coming for Pte. Joseph Losey, Water Street North. Since he left for overseas with the 39th Battalion, the shadow of death has twice passed over his household, his daughter Florence having died suddenly, and his son, Lance-Corp. Harold Losey, having died as the result of wounds sustained at the front.

Among the other Peterborough soldiers who returned home this morning was Pte. Robert Mahood, son of Mr. Robert Mahood of this city. Pte. Mahood enlisted in the West, and went overseas with the 31st Calgary Battalion. He was a victim of rheumatism in England, and has been invalided home.

Sergt. White, who went overseas with the 48th Highlanders in the First Contingent, was one of the soldiers to arrive here last night. Sergt. White was not a Peterborough man, but his wife has taken up residence here, having been living in Peterborough since last Christmas.

The train which brought last evening's quota of the 83rd carried several hundred soldiers invalided from overseas, the majority Toronto men. They were in high spirits at the prospects of soon seeing their friends again.

Among them were two former Peterborough residents. Pte. Henry Ryford, who went overseas with the 1st Canadian Contingent, and Louis Fortier, who went over with the 2nd Division. The latter is well known in local T.A.S. circles. Both soldiers recognised a number of acquaintances among the crowd on the platform.

U.S. Court Sustains Legality of Christian Science Practice

Since 1911, Cole, a Christian Science practitioner of New York, has been under indictment on a charge of practising medicine without authority. He was convicted on trial in 1912. Appeal was made and judgment affirmed. Another appeal was decided a day or two ago, reversing judgment and granting a new trial. In deciding the case, the opinion of the court was "entirely favourable to Christian Science," and one of the judges went further and denied the power of the Legislature to make it a crime to treat disease by prayer."

George Street Methodist Church

The W.M.S. of the George Street Church held their annual rally day service in the Church Parlour on Oct. the 10th. Mrs. J. K. Moore gave a splendid address on missionary work.

Mrs. J. E. Middleton read a poem, entitled "Thanksgiving." Mrs. (Dr.) Harwell and Mrs. Curvin sang a duet, and Miss Gallagher a solo. Both were very much enjoyed.

Refreshments were served, and a social time spent.

Watchfully Waited For The President

(Special to The Examiner):

PITTSBURG, Oct. 19.—During President Wilson's ride about Pittsburg today, a man carrying a black satchel, made determined efforts to jump on the running board of the President's car. He was finally overpowered and hustled off to a station house by a policeman. At the station house he said he was dissatisfied with the President's handling of European affairs. In the satchel was found a long-bladed knife and several chisels.

Canada's Indebtedness

fected civilization for the whole world. So when in haughtiness the Hun flung into the world's circle its gauntlet of defiance and showed its fiendish purpose by strangling Belgium, the British sailors closed Germany's ocean gates at Kiel and on the Baltic, and there was set as a watch a relentless cordon of great vessels and efficient sailors on the German coast, so that no traffic passes out or in. German cannot send her "Made in Germany" goods to markets as before, cannot bring in raw material or food supplies. Her factories are therefore closed, her trade destroyed, her colonies gone, her merchant ships tied up in neutral harbours, her people impoverished. Some suffering and humiliation may be good for the soul of the Hun. Such is the work of the sailor and the ship he mans. Such indeed might happen to us, however innocent, if sea control passed into the hands of our resourceful, stiff-necked and cruel foes. Again the control of the ocean waves by our sailors, of battleships and merchantmen, means the continuance of the British Empire—an Empire which is a beneficent union of free nations situated in different parts of the world. United for protection and the preservation of those ideals of freedom, of justice, and of truth which we in common hold. To that end one appreciates the truth that Kipling expresses:

For the Lord our God most high
Has made the deep as dry
He hath smote for us a pathway
To the ends of the earth.

The British Fleet have policed the seas and kept them free, not for the Britishers alone, but for all peoples who properly behave and observe the law of nations and the rights of humanity. Our British Empire which is the servant of the nations in this respect, has accordingly become the chief among them.

Canada is Prosperous.

Canadians are prosperous to-day because the great trade route between Canada and the United States on this side of the Atlantic, and the great British seaports on the otherside have been kept by the vigilance and sea mastery of the British Navy. While it is true that a few vessels have been lost, these incidents are over-shadowed by the fact that hundreds of thousands of troops (250,000 from Canada alone) have been already transported to the fields of battle across the seven seas from all parts of the earth with the same safety as exists in normal times. For two years the navy has convoyed Kitchener's army back and forth across the channel every day—and has never lost a ship.

I remarked that a few ships had been lost, but it will be of interest to you to know that since the outbreak of the war England has launched as an addition to her navy a new Fleet, the equal of Germany's alone; and at the same time she has continued to hammer out merchant ships that the Allies may not lack supplies. The shipyards of one district alone can produce double the output of the enemy; those of the United Kingdom can equal the output of the world.

High Water Mark.

Resuming that end of my subject Canada was never so prosperous as today. For the first four months of the fiscal year our revenue showed an increase of 50 p.c., increasing from $45,-000,000 in 1915 to $47,000,000. Our bank clearings for the month of May alone show an increase over the same month last year of $327,000,000, or 50 p.c. Our big Steel Corporations show net earnings of 110 p.c. over last year. Our railways have established new records in their earnings— the three Transcontinental lines being at present overtaxed in hauling the country's produce to the ocean ports. Our wheat crop in 1915 amounted to 413,-000,000 bushels as against 161,000,000 the pervious year. Our trade and commerce reached a high water mark in 1916, with an increase of $350,000,000 over last year, and throughout the Dominion the wheels in our manufacturing plants are turning night and day, endeavouring to fill the overflow orders for all lines of merchandise.

Mr. Chairman and Gentlemen, who has made possible this extraordinary prosperity that we Canadians are enjoying in spite of the war or by reason of the war? Is it not entirely due to the brave sailors who have laid down and are laying down their lives in all the seas of the world in the noble name of duty? Numbers of them — how many we shall never know—have died that women and children might live, and not a few of them, ere the death call came, performed deeds of valour that will never see the light of print, although they will be found recorded in the imperishable annals of the angels.

An Awful Toll.

We do know that more than 4,000 men of the Mercantile Marine have given up their lives in order that the Empire may carry on its task, while the toll paid by the Royal Navy has been far greater. The recent battle off Jut land claimed more than 6,000, in addition to which many men have been disabled, and it may safely be assumed that the great majority of the victims left behind them dependents who will have to look to public or private aid for protection.

Canada has enjoyed during the last two years the protection of the sailors from attack. The German squadron of the Pacific undoubtedly would have attacked Vancouver and Victoria had it not been for the British cruisers that were hunting it, and had the enemy possessed a fleet on the Atlantic that could challenge the British forces, Halifax and St. John would certainly have been the object of an attack, and the thunder of the German shells would have been heard as far as Quebec and Montreal.

Cost of Protection.

The cost of this protection has rested entirely on the British taxpayer, although New Zealand and Australia have taken a share upon their shoulders, as well as the smallest atom of the Empire, the Malay States, which has contributed a battleship. It has been estimated that if Canada were bearing her proportionate share of the cost of the Imperial Navy, she would be paying $47,000,000 per annum. As a people, we long ago should have done our share towards the Naval defence of the Empire. While we cannot at present take that work upon our shoulders, it is not too late for us to relieve the people of England of a part of the task they now have to undertake in caring for the wounded sailors, and to do something to alleviate the sorrow of the widow and the suffering of the orphans of those whose blood stained the decks, or who sunk, victors, beneath the waves.

We are proud to have such a man as the Right Hon. A. J. Balfour, First Lord of the Admiralty, to have the service of a Churchill and a wise Admiral Fisher. We cheer the name of Jellicoe, and bare our heads in respect to Sir David Beatty, outstanding in the Jutland fight. But what of our sailors, faithful, efficient, self-sacrificing and courageous, without whose work and duty well done, these notable men would have entirely failed.

The Ordinary Worker.

When the ordinary worker parts from his wife and children for the day's toil ahead of him, he is reasonably certain of seeing them again within a short period, and even in his hours of labour he is "in touch" with them. But not so with our sailors who, when they strain their wives and their little ones to their breasts in the pangs of parting, are never certain that they will ever see them again in this world. When the sailor leaves the harbour, be it on a mine-sweeper or a Dreadnought, or on a scouting expedition, or for an encounter with the foe, he does not know that he ever will return. If his ship goes down he is seen struggling in the cold water. If wounded, the salt adds to his sufferings, and if not killed by shot or shell his chances of rescue is but one in a thousand.

These are a few of the considerations which led a body of patriotic Canadian citizens, headed by Mr. W. G. Ross, President of Harbour Commissioners of Montreal, to take up with the British Admiralty the matter of the raising of a Fund to be devoted to the relief of disabled sailors of the British Royal Navy and Mercantile Marine, and of the widows and children of those sailors who have sacrificed their lives in the performance of their duties. The Fund is to show to a small extent, the appreciation of Canada in the only way that is possible at the present time, viz., by the donation of money for the purposes just outlined. His Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught, has shown his keen interest in the Fund by graciously consenting to act as Patron, while the Right Honourable, Sir R. L. Borden, Premier, is one of the Honorary Presidents of the same.

It is proposed to divide the Canadian Fund between two classes, as it is felt that no discrimination should be shown against the brave men who, while not in the Royal Navy, have yet suffered so severely in keeping the seas, in the face of the submarine terror, or have done such great things in mine sweeping, patrolling, transport service and a multitude of the useful and necessary auxiliary services.

The Mercantile Marine.

Admiral Lord Beresford, a short time ago, in referring to the Mercantile Marine sailors stated, that "had it not been for the Mercantile Marine coming to the assistance of the Royal Navy in time of stress when we were short of cruisers, small craft and destroyers, we would infallibly have lost this war at the beginning. We owe that to the Mercantile Navy and the Navy appreciate it, for after all, both are strands of the same rope, brothers at sea.

Intimation has been received from the Admiralty that they will also undertake to distribute whatever money is given them among the institution for disabled and wounded Navy men and Homes for the Widows and children.

The money which will be apportioned by the Committee to the Mercantile Marine will be entrusted to a London committee, headed by the Canadian High Commissioner for the care of dependents of those who have died for the Empire.

Canada as a part of the Empire, has been in a large measure the beneficiary of the heroic work of Britain's sailormen and we will be doing no more than our plain duty if you recognise this fact by establishing a branch of the fund in Peterborough, and contributing your mite towards the relief of the widows and children of our sailors.

Immediately after the Jutland battle the people of New Zealand forwarded by cable $26,000 for the purpose, and the Czar of Russia, $2,500 to Lady Beatty. The citizens of Montreal have already contributed $155,-000 towards the fund, and during the past three months. Branches have been organized in every city in all the Provinces of the Dominion.

The inauguration of the British Sailors' Relief Fund will certainly instil confidence in those still fighting our battles, that if they fall, a grateful Empire will care for those whom they leave behind.

A National Duty.

Canada is known throughout the world for her generosity and for the large amount of money subscribed to the Canadian Patriotic Fund., Belgian and French Relief Funds, as well as to Regimental, Kitchen and other funds, and nobody realizes better than the General Committee of the British Sailors' Relief Fund, the number of calls upon your purses these days; but, as true Britishers, you cannot ignore the potency of the appeal which says that when men die for your welfare, you cannot do less than honour their memory by helping to care for their loved ones. Our soldiers and sailors have always been ready to do their duty. Let us be ready. By this, I mean, everybody who is not fighting, the general public of both sexes. Let us all be ready to manfully and cheerfully shoulder our share of the inevitable burden of discomfort, privation and hardship entailed by this bloody war, and let nobody adopt the criminal attitude of thinking that they themselves ought not to be affected by the war. If this is accomplished and every man and woman in the country stands, figuratively, shoulder to shoulder with our brave sailors in God's own time there will, without the slightest shadow of a doubt be a satisfactory ending to the titanic conflict between light and darkness and freedom and slavery. By and by, when khaki has ceased to be our national costume, when the fair fields of France and Belgium smile again in harvest, sunshine, when our sailor lads can ride the seas in safety, and little children sleep unthreatened by murder from the air, then the Empire will want her sailors more than ever to maintain our place in the commerce of the world. Meanwhile, let us help our brave sailors and their poor and destitute dependents.

We cannot check the sorrow or hold back the tears on our gratitude, as we think of our brave citizens who fell for us in Flanders, and there rest in unnamed graves over which the poppies grow and the birds sing sweet requiem, but in our thought, our sorrow and our gratitude, the brave soldiers should be sharers with [illegible] Let us make a contribution to the British Soldiers' Relief Fund, in memory of those who sleep in the depths of the ocean, and whose requiescant is sung by its ceaseless waves, and in thankfulness to those who, through their own faithfulness and heroism in our behalf will suffer until rewarded with a crown of service that does not fade away.

Our sailors have more than maintained the traditions of Nelson and Drake; they are dying for our protection as surely as men ever died for any single purpose in this world. Anything we can do for the families of these men, for the courageous sailors of the Navy and of the Mercantile fleet, for the heroes of the trawlers—"the Fringes of the Fleet"—working in the very shadow of death—will only be a drop in the bucket compared with that for which we, and generations to come, shall be indebted to them, indebted not only for what they have done, but please God, will continue to do, until victory is ours and justice triumphs.

MONTREAL LIEUTENANT BELIEVED LOCAL BOY

Lieut. Joseph A. Jervais, of Montreal, officially reported killed in action, is in all probability a Peterborough boy, who resided here years ago before moving East. His home was on Romaine Street, near Crescent, and he will be remembered by many south-end residents. Previous to the war, Lieut. Jervais held a fine position with Goodwins, Limited, as a department manager. He is further identified by a reference to his brother, Pte. Adelard Jervais, who is now with a battalion at Bermuda.

32 DUMMER CATTLE REPORTED TRACED

From all reports the Dummer cattle stealing case is gradually unfolding. County Constable Moore, accompanied by Provincial Inspector Boyd, motored to Dummer this morning on a mission that is expected to bear results. Inspector Boyd, it was stated, has traced thirty-two head of cattle which are alleged to have come through the hands of the Hill party. Some of them were discovered in Buffalo, some in St. Catharines, and in other markets. For the most part only the hides remained, and Dummer people are on the way to examine these hides, following up the suspicion the authorities have been working on.

Two or three weeks ago Constable Moore was talking to a farmer from the East Riding, who casually told of having seen a number of cattle being driven early in the morning along a road leading toward Campbellford. The farmer had his suspicions of this and drissed and this aroused Constable Moore's curiosity. A Dummer [illegible] happened to be up at a [illegible] and was interested by the various things on the highway. Some one saw a number of cattle being driven along. These were queer occurrences that aroused suspicion, which was passed on to the authorities until a sale was uncovered which the police are following up. Clarence Sampson has not yet been found, but to-day's visit may produce something in this respect.

Funeral of Miss T. W. Nimmo

The funeral of Miss Frances Wilhelmina Nimmo, eldest daughter of the late Robert and Mary Nimmo, took place from the family home in South Monaghan, Ontario, on Wednesday, October 18th, at eleven o'clock, Rev. Mr. Wickett of Fraserville, officiating. The late Miss Nimmo had not been well for some time and when it was found that an operation would be necessary, she went to Toronto General Hospital, and although the operation was successful, complications set in, and in spite of the best skill and care, she passed away on Sunday afternoon. Although of a quiet, reserved disposition she was loved and highly respected by all who new her and the funeral was largely attended by neighbours and friends from distant points, who gathered to express their sorrow and sympathy with the brothers and sisters who will sadly miss her quiet presence in the home.

Music & Drama

"SOME BABY."

The funniest show in years was the verdict that last night's audience pronounced in regard to "Some Baby," the three-act farce which graced the board at the Grand last night. The audience laughed so hard at times that tears ran down their cheeks, and they were still chuckling when they left the theatre. The action hinges around an elixir of youth that Dr. Relyea thinks he has discovered. It doesn't really work, but the doctor thinks it has, and there lies the fund. The mix-ups are fast and furious, and at times the audience simply howled. A splendid company made the most out of the fun-making possibilities of the piece. Miss Grace Merritt was delightful as Sylvia, and Don McMillan, as Dr. Relyea, kept the merriment at a high pitch. It is unfortunate that the rain kept the promenades down. "Some Baby" is a sure cure for the blues.

May Carry Flask Says Col. Denison

Magistrate Denison ruled in the Toronto Police Court yesterday morning that it is not an offence against the Ontario Temperance Act to carry a flask of whisky. The Colonel pointed out that it might really be in the pockets for medical purposes. There were several test cases. Crown Attorney Corley admitted that a man might easily be arrested when he was merely carrying a bottle from one lawful place to another, equally lawful. "Rubbish," said the Crown. "the flask may be carried because, like many of our learned friends who attend they don't smoke [illegible] it."

BRITISH TROOPS ADVANCE OVER 500 YARDS

German Light Cruiser is Torpedoed By British Submarine

Supremacy of The Artillery and Aircraft Gave Allies Steady Gain

Continuous Push Since July 1 Reviewed by General Haig—28,918 Germans Have Been Captured and Allies Drove to Fourth Line—Weather Consistently Unfavourable, But Allied Airmen Performed Good Work During Whole Period—Many Isolated Struggles But Troops Always Superior.

ALLIES' STEADY ADVANCE

LONDON, October 23.—General Sir Douglas Haig, the British commander in France, has sent a report on the operations which have been in progress since the end of September, when, he says, the British forces had advanced well beyond the crest of the main ridge from Thiepval to Sailly-Saillisel.

From the line thus held, according to the report, the ground slopes generally to a shallow valley running northwest from near Sailly-Saillisel to about 2,000 yards south of Bapaume, and then turns westward and joins the valley of the River Ancre at Miraumont. From the main Thiepval-Morval ridge a series of long well-marked spurs runs down to the valley described above. The most important of the series is a hammer-headed spur immediately west of Flers, at western extremity which stands a tumulus, called Butte de Warlencourt.

ALLIES' STEADY ADVANCE.

Lying across the main trend of the ground another well marked spur runs from Morval north toward Thilloy, passing a thousand yards east of Gueudecourt. Behind this spur lie's the German fourth position, to get within assaulting distance of which it was necessary to carry Le Sars and these two spurs. These were held as intermediate positions by the Germans, every advantage being taken of the sunken roads, buildings and undulating nature of the country.

"On September 29," continued the report, "we carried Destremont farm, 300 yards southwest of Le Sars and just north of the Albert-Bapaume road. On the afternoon of October 1 we advanced our line on a front of 3,000 yards, occupying the buildings of Eaucourt L'Abbaye, 1,400 yards southeast of Le Sars.

"The struggle in this neighbourhood continued with great severity during the night and early in the morning of October 2 the enemy had regained a footing in the place. During the whole of next day and night the battle fluctuated, but by the following morning we had succeeded in finally clearing the buildings of the enemy. On the 6th we won the mill northwest of Eaucourt L'Abbaye.

TO FOURTH LINE.

"On the afternoon of the 7th, in conjunction with the French on our right, we attacked on a wide front between the Albert-Bapaume road and Les Boeufs. We drove the enemy from Le Sars and near-lying positions also to the east and west of that village after severe fighting. Between Gueudecourt and Les Boeufs we forced our way forward from 600 to 1,000 yards.

"The period since to that date has been occupied in winning ground between Le Sars and Les Boeufs up to the slopes of the low ridges already mentioned. In the area between Thiepval and Le Sars we made steady progress and gradually won a series of strong positions. The fighting has been heavy and prolonged. The enemy risisted stubbornly until surrounded in one place after another, and large numbers of prisoners have fallen into our hands.

STOP HUN ATTACK.

"During this period we had to repulse counter attacks. Generally these were stopped by our artillery and machine gun fire but when they did succeed in forcing their way through and reaching our positions the infantry rifle fire caused heavy losses. On only one or two occasions did they manage to regain a footing in a trench. Then they were promptly driven out again with the bayonet.

"Outside the Somme battlefield our troops have shown great activity in trench raids. Between Ypres and Loos over 160 raids were carried out, in which we secured many prisoners and inflicted heavy casualties.

28,918 CAPTURED.

"The captured during the fortnight brings the total number of prisoners in the Somme battle since the beginning of July to 28,918, and in the action of October 7 one division alone, which previously had had many days of hard fighting took eight officers and 474 men of other ranks.

AIRCRAFT SUPREMACY.

"The weather during the course of operations reviewed was consistently unfavourable for aircraft. Heavy rains, strong southwesterly winds and lowered visibility rendered their work most difficult. Yet in spite of such adverse conditions our machines made many valuable reconnaissance, and repeatedly attacked enemy lines of communication, ammunition dumps and troops on the move.

"A captured document emanating from German army headquarters, in acknowledging the superiority of the British airmen, suggests methods of reorganization by which it is hoped that 'it will be possible at least for some hours to contest the supremacy in the air of the enemy.'

"Assisted by our aeroplanes, our artillery has continued to play a notable part in the fighting. It has established and maintained clear superiority over that of the enemy. It has supported our infantry attacks, disorganized enemy's arrangemets behid his un"m'gkqj bfgwyp jpjpjpjpjpj arrival of his reserves and supplies. It allows him no rest, day or night, which materia! assists in that it is wearing dowa his morale, which is vital to success in battle.

"On many occasions during the period under review the battle resolved itself into isolated wrugglea. Both in these and the main advances our infantry have shown their wonted endurance and devotion. Captured docpmets bear clear testimony to the effect of our continuous artillery fire, to the dash and discipline of our infantry attacks, and to the quality of our men."

Serbians Near Monastir As Mackensen Tries Turn Front On Dobrudja Line

Kaiser's Generals Seem Determined to Force Their Way to Bucharest but All Attempts So Far Have Broken Down—Ferdinand's Troops Have Completely Rallied—Serbians Batter at Last Bulgarian Line

LONDON, October 23.—Mackensen has opened a new offensive in the Dobrudja. Striking at the allied line along the whole front in the Roumanian province, he has forced back the Roumanian left wing, resting on the Black Sea Coast. The battle which is as heavy as any of those which marked his first drive, is still in progress.

The Kaiser's generals seem determined to force their way to Bucharest—if that be possible. Falkenhayn attempted this, but the staunch resistance he met has blocked the frontier passes. To Mackensen—operating at the other end of the Balkan battle line, the task has fallen again. Falkenhayn made several fierce efforts Saturday to break the Roumanian line defending the border, but none of these succeeded.

FERDINAND'S MEN RALLY.

King Ferdinand's troops, who seem to have rallied completely, from the heavy blow the Germans struck at them a fortnight ago made additional progress in clearing their country of the enemy and drove back the Teutons on the eastern line as far as the frontier.

The Serbians, who are battering at the last Bulgarian line on the ridge ten miles east of Monastir, have held their ground. Berlin, conceding that they achieved a temporary success, says the advance has now been halted. But military observers here believe that whenever King Peter's troops decide to launch a heavy drive, the Bulgars will not be able to withstand it.

SARRAIL IS GUIDING.

From a high authority on the Balkan operations, I learned something Saturday of the situation that prevails there. The Serbs have not used their full strength yet; their campaign is being guided by Sarrail's orders.

Naturally, they are anxious to regain their country as soon as possible. The people sometimes become impatient of the delay, but they realize that they must sacrifice their desires to the allies' strategy as a whole

ON THE RUSSIAN FRONT.

NEW YORK, October 23.—The London correspondent of the Tribune cables as follows: The greatest battle in the world's history is about to be staged on the eastern front, in the opinion of high military officials here. After months of manoeuvring nearly seven million of men have come to grips along the almost unbroken front from Riga to the Danube. Hand-to-hand fighting of the most violent character is going on on the while length of the 900-mile line.. The next three weeks will probably see the climax of this struggle.

RUSSIANS SLOWLY GAINING.

So far there is no indication of a definite result, although the Russians unquestionably are slowly gaining ground. The chief Russian move at the moment seems to aim at the envelopment of Halicz from the north and the cutting of the Teuton line of communications between that stronghold and, Lemberg.

That the attacks of the Czar's troops are succeeding in smashing the enemy's defences at some places is indicated in no uncertain manner by the sudden and hurried transfer of the German Third Guards Division to the Halicz sector from Lemberg, where they had hitherto been held in reserve.

In Volhynia, the Russians have made a dent in the enemy's line near Czeriany, fifteen miles southeast of Kovel.

The German Guards were hurled at the Russians Saturday and succeeded in wresting away an important height on the west bank of the Narayuvka. More than 2,000 Russians were taken prisoner.

WINTER HELPS THE RUSSIANS.

Observers here lay emphasis on the value of the severe Russian winter to the Czar's troops. This period will prove, as it has proved in the past, of immense value to the Russians and of little value to the Teutons. For the Russians it means the accumulation of great shell supplies and the training of new armies of reserves. It means that when warm weather returns the Czar's troops will be ready for another supreme effort that will tax the enemy to the uttermost.

BRITISH TROOPS MAKE IMPORTANT GAIN IN THE WEST

Penetrate the German Lines to a Depth of Five Hundred Yards, on a Five Thousand Yard Front—Over Eight Hundred Prisoners Captured

GENERALS WOUNDED

LONDON, Oct. 23.— British troops advanced on a line of 5,000 yards, to a depth of 500 yards, capturing Stuff and Regina trenches and taking over eight hundred prisoners. The British strongly held all ground taken and more prisoners are coming in.

The Germans made several desperate attempts to recapture lost ground south of the Somme but were repulsed with heavy losses. In the region of Chaulnes, French troops won brilliant successes.

PARIS, Oct. 23.— Germans again attacked in strong force early Sunday morning the French positions in the region of Chaulnes, but were repulsed with heavy losses. Two of the best known French generals, Marchand and Deville, have been wounded on the Somme front, one slightly and the other seriously.

RICH WOMAN LEFT HER ESTATE TO A FRIEND

"To Repay a Great Debt," Reads the Will of Mrs. Grosvenor, Who Died at Murray Bay.

NEW YORK, Oct. 21.—"To repay in a very small part a very great debt and obligation," was the way Mrs. Minnie Grosvenor explained in her will, filed in the Surrogate Court, the bequests to Gertrude Gilbert, a friend. Mrs. Grosvenor was the widow of James B. M. Grosvenor. She died on September 15, at Murray Bay, Canada.

Mrs. Grosvenor left an estate of about $100,000 to Mrs. Gilbert, who lives at 16 West Eighth Street, to whom she left her estate at Point-au-Pic., Que., a hunting lodge, a half interest in her New York residence and horses, carriages, and other personal effects. Mrs. Comese Lodeling Stead, of Bridgeport, Conn., receives the other half interest in the residence, some effects and the residuary estate. Henry W. Taft, brother of ex-President Taft, is named as one of the executors.

The coiffure is getting higher and higher, and alarmists prophesy the modes of Louis XV., with their Italian curls and scallop shells.

CREW OF BREMEN ARE MOURNED AS DEAD

Families in Germany Convicted That Merchant Submarine Has Been Lost.

BALTIMORE, Md., Oct. 21.—Paul C. J. Hilken admitted yesterday that the German merchant submarine Bremen is a month overdue, that he feared the vessel had met with an accident and that she had been lost with all her crew. This is the first time that anyone in a position to know the German side of the story of the Bremen has permitted his name to be used in connection with the belief that the ship is lost.

Hilken is the American manager of the Deutsche Ozean Rhederei, owners of the Bremen and the Deutschland.

Hilken returned to Baltimore to-day from New London, Conn., where for weeks he has been awaiting the arrival of the U-Miner. He made no effort to hide the grief he felt over the fate of the boat and of the deaths of the members of her crew—thirty officers and men. Hilken has advices from Germany that the members of the families of the Bremen's crew were mourning them as dead. He said that the U-53 probably had been sent to this side to search for the missing submarine. He denied that more than one Bremen was built and said he believes the Deutschland will make another trip.

Ma Stop Women Of Italy Buying Expensive Gowns

ROME, Oct. 21.—A governmental decree just issued increases the price of sugar from 25 cents per pound to 34 cents. The reason for this action, it is stated, is the urgent necessity of limiting national consumption in view of the increase of overseas freight rates.

It is proposed to prohibit the purchase by women of expensive garments and finery. Already the importation of furs and oriental carpets has been prohibited.

REQUISITIONS HIDES.

British War Office Will Take Possession of Importations.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 21.—British War Office requisition on imported hides was announced in a cablegram yesterday from the American Consul-General at London. It reads:

All hides in process of conversion into leather are expected from this order."

"THE LITTLE FORTUNE"

BY ARNOLD FREDERICKS

In another moment they fell, clasped in each other's arms, across the sill. The slow movement of their breasts, the slight returning color in their cheeks, showed that they still lived.

CHAPTER IX
THE HALF-BURNED LETTER

It was some fifteen minutes later when M. Dumas raised his head from the window-sill and looked about him.

Before his eyes stretched out the endless vista of roofs and lighted windows which constitute New York's aspect at night. He drew a deep breath of the cool, life-giving air and turned to the girl beside him.

She was still unconscious, but her faint breathing showed that she lived.

He rose and, going into the tiny kitchenette at the rear of the apartment, sought frantically for something which might serve to revive her.

At last, on one of the shelves of a closet he came across a brandy bottle, in the bottom of which there still remained a small quantity of the liquor.

He divided this into two parts, pouring it into a couple of glasses he found on the shelves and, after drinking one portion himself, hurried into the front room and forced the contents of the other glass between the girl's blue lips.

Her hands had already begun to grow cold; he chafed them roughly between the palms of his own.

After a time her breathing became deeper and more regular. She moved her arms, her body, restlessly. Then her eyelids fluttered, her eyes opened and she gave a great shuddering sigh.

Dumas drew back with an exclamation of joy. He saw that the worst was over. Lifting her in his arms, he placed her on the couch, threw open the other window, and brought her a glass of water.

She thanked him feebly, but he could see from the rapidly returning color of her cheeks that she was now beyond any danger.

His own strength had come back to him, and with it came a renewed determination to find and bring to justice this man Hartmann, who called himself Charles Vernon, and who had not only murdered his companion Reinhardt, but had so nearly ended the lives of Mlle. Mercier and himself.

His first step was to make a thorough search of the several rooms, in the hope that there might remain in them some clue, however small, which would serve to definitely connect the so-called Charles Vernon with Hartmann, the rheumatic passenger of the Richelieu.

The latter's appearance was not in itself sufficient. Dumas's accusation—made to the man himself an hour before—had been mere guess-work. As a matter of fact, with the possible exception of Grace Duvall, no one had seen the man Hartmann after his rapid escape from the Hotel Rochambeau. Whether Charles Vernon was really Hartmann or not Dumas did not know.

His search of the apartment resulted in nothing. All the papers in the place had been burned and now lay in a blackened pile upon the tiling of the hearth.

For the rest the apartment contained but a few books, inscribed with the name of George Vernon, the dead purser, and a bureau and closet in which were the usual articles of clothing.

If there had been anything of value in the place, such as silver toilet articles or pieces of bric-a-brac, the man and woman had apparently removed them.

The small desk containing nothing except a few receipted bills and some laundry lists. The scrap-basket was empty.

Realizing that it would be some little time before Mlle. Mercier would feel able to leave the place, Dumas continued his search with the utmost care, but not a thing of any importance rewarded his efforts. He was about to give up in disgust, when, glancing by chance at the pile of charred papers on the hearth, he saw that a portion of the edge of one of them had not been entirely consumed.

He separated the brown and charred leaves with the utmost care. In the center of the mass, to which the fire had not entirely penetrated, lay a small scrap of half-burned paper. One side of the sheet, longitudinally, had been burned completely away; the other side, although too charred and brittle to be lifted from its position, still showed clearly upon it the marks of handwriting.

Duvall examined the bit of paper carefully. Some of the words which he managed to make out filled him with interest. He called gently to Mlle. Mercier and asked her if she now felt sufficiently recovered to come and look at the hand-writing.

The girl rose slowly from the couch and trembling from her recent experience, crossed the room.

"Here," said Dumas, pointing at the bit of paper. "Can you recognize the handwriting? Look here in this corner. Where the paper is only slightly scorched. Does what you see mean anything to you?"

The letter was in French. The girl stared at it for some time in silence. Then a look of sadness crossed her face. "It is my father's handwriting" she said. "I did not recognize it at first, but now I see clearly. What does it mean?"

"It means," remarked Dumas slowly, "that this is the real letter that your father wrote to you on his death bed. It means that the man who left here a short time ago is not Chas. Vernon, as he calls himself, but Hartmann, the murderer of George Vernon and of Reinhardt, the doctor. And I fear it also means," he concluded sorrowfully that whatever was in that letter is lost to us forever."

"Why do you suppose he burned it?" asked the girl.

"No doubt the message—whatever it was that the letter contained—he has safely in his memory. The presence of the letter itself is an evidence of guilt which he showed excellent judgment in destroying. If found on his person it would at once connect him with the tragedy which took place aboard the Richelieu."

"Can you read it at all?" Mlle. Mercier asked as she gazed longingly at the charred and crumbling letter. "I would be so happy to know what my father's dying message was—what word he tried to send me." The tears gathered in her eyes as she spoke.

Dumas took a bit of paper from the desk and, kneeling down before the fireplace, proceeded to make a copy of such parts and words of the letter as were still legible.

Even where the paper had been almost completely charred the faint black lines of the ink permitted many of the words to be readily deciphered.

After a time he rose and placed the result of his labours on the table. "This is all that I can make out," he said. "I fear it will be scarcely intelligible."

She bent over the copy which he had made, striving to obtain from it some idea of her father's words, but they seemed meaningless.

They formed one complete side of the letter, with here and there a word missing. Dumas read them over and over, but still the purport of the letter eluded him. The fragment, translated, was as follows:

"My beloved daughter
"I am sending

When you get it, take

Your loving father,
'Alphonse Merc."

It seems very clear, mademoiselle," Dumas said presently, "that this letter refers to a great fortune which the one-franc piece was to enable you to obtain. What this fortune is, and how to secure it, is undoubtedly known to Hartman and his companion. They are able, in some way, to determine by inspection or trial, in a few moments, whether or not any coin presented to them is the right one—the one your father sent to you."

"But I do not understand," said Mlle. Mercier, "how, since these men once had the coin in their possession, they ever lost it again. After killing M. Vernon, they must have secured possession of it. I cannot see why they haven't it now. The whole affair seems most mysterious."

"I confess it does at first sight, and yet I think I can explain it—at least I have a theory of my own that would fit the circumstances."

The girl looked at him. "You, monsieur," she said, "are by no means a teacher of music."

"No," laughed Dumas. "I am not. To be frank with you, I am a detective."

"A detective." She looked at him in some alarm.

"Do not be afraid, mademoiselle. I am working entirely in your interests. M. Germaine, the managing director of the Trans-atlantic Line, has placed the case in my hands."

"Oh!" She seemed to be relieved. "And what is your theory which explains why this man Hartmann wanted the coin which Mr. Morris gave me?"

"In the first place, mademoiselle," said Dumas, "you understand, of course, that these two scoundrels, Hartmann and Reinhardt, knew all about the franc and its secret when they boarded the Richelieu at Havre."

"But—how?"

"Readily enough. Reinhardt was your father's physician. He must have watched him, and realized that by obtaining possession of the coin he could secure the fortune, whatever it is, that its possessor evidently has morning, and a few moments before unable to gain possession of the coin prior to its delivery to Mr. Morris. It is probable that only that morning, an da few moments before Mr. Morris's arrival, did he learn its secret.

"These fellows doubtless formed the plan of crossing to America on board the Richelieu and during the passage obtaining the coin from the safe.

"They succeeded in doing so, as you know, after murdering the purser. I am of the opinion that they did not intend to murder him—just what the meaning of the blood-stains on the door of Hartmann's stateroom, and of the throwing of the body in the forward hatch are, I do not know. We may, in fact, never know. But it is clear that they got the coin, and placed it in Vernon's pocket, before throwing him into the hatch, a forged letter and another franc piece similar to the one the real letter contained. I have no doubt they brought this additional coin along with them for this purpose."

"Such coins, then, are not rare?"

"Oh, no! Francs of that period are not difficult to obtain."

"And still I do not see how the real coin got out of their possession."

"I can only explain it, mademoiselle, upon the theory that by some carelessness, some mistake, they actually put the real coin, instead of the substitute and, in Vernon's pocket along with the forged letter."

"Ah, I see. But that was the one Mr. Morris gave me."

"Yes."

"And I brought it here to-night—and this man said it was not the one—"

Dumas smiled. "You thought you brought it here, mademoiselle, but you did not. Here is the one you brought. It is the same that was found upon the floor of room 32, at the Rochambeau."

"Won't you explain, monsieur, if you please?" said the girl, puzzled.

"To go on with my theory, mademoiselle, I assume that those two scoundrels discovered their error at once, but were unable to rectify it because the forward hatch on the vessel had been closed, and there was no possible way in which they could gain access to the murdered man's body.

Telephone Courtesy is Growing in Favor.

Newspapers and periodicals, which reflect so well the trend of public opinion, are continually urging the practice of telephone courtesy.

Progressive merchants are studying its relation to their sales. Employees are being trained to treat telephone callers with the same degree of courtesy and consideration that obtains in a face-to-face conversation.

And the result for those who practice telephone courtesy faithfully is a constantly growing volume of telephone trade and good-will.

The encouragement you give to your employees in developing pleasing telephone manners will bear fruit in the promotion of good-will amongst your customers.

WONDERFUL TALE OF AN ACTRESS

Struggled with Sickness and Discouragement; How Relieved.

Bayville, Killingly, Conn.—"I shall be glad to have every woman know what I know now, after using Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Although I am only 24 years old, I have suffered for the past eight years. I hated the doctors, for a doctor told me to give up the stage where I was playing with my husband.

I had bearing down pains, my health failed me, and I could not work on the stage, and wasn't able to tend my baby or even get around myself. I was always downhearted and discontented with the world, and only lived for the sake of my little girl. The doctor said to move to some quiet little town away from the noisy city, and I might be able to live and feel well, so I went to Bayville in November. At that time I was so sick I could not walk around, and my husband kept house and I stayed in bed. One day in January I read your advertisement in a newspaper, and I sent for Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and started taking it. Within two weeks time I was a different woman, could get around, and felt so good that it was a pleasure to do my housework. I felt contented and happy, and now am the picture of health, and am tempted to return to the stage. We appreciate my health as the most precious thing on earth."—Mrs. H. L. IS CHRIST YOUR ADVOCATE WITH GOD?

Advocate for Fully Consecrated Believers.

Only Those Who Have Taken the Steps of Repentance, Faith, and Consecration Can Truly Understand the Plan of God—The Meek and the Broken-hearted Now Sought by the Lord—God's Message Not a Hammer to Break Hard Hearts—These to Be Broken Later—This Age to Gather the "Jewels," Who Are Then to Be Made Up—When Christ Became the Advocate of the Church—The Work of the Advocate.

[The matter under this heading is supplied by the Pastor Russell Lecture Bureau, who conduct the Brooklyn Tabernacle (unsectarian) Bible Studies, and who have arranged for its publication.]

Dallas, Texas, Oct. 22.—Pastor Russell is here to-day, in attendance upon the I. B. S. A. Convention. His address to the Bible students was based upon 1 John 2:1—"We have an Advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the Righteous." He said:

For some time we have been deeply impressed with the thought that no one can have a proper understanding and appreciation of the Plan of God unless he has taken the steps of repentance from sin, of faith in Christ as his atoning Sacrifice, and of full consecration to God. We have noted that many who express great appreciation of God's wonderful Plan of Salvation still neglect or postpone the giving of themselves to God. This is a serious mistake. When one sees that he is a sinner, the first thing that he should do is to repent of his sins and accept Christ as his Saviour. Then he should dedicate his life to God, yielding up his will to be guided thenceforth by the Divine will. After these steps have been taken, the individual is for the first time able to have a heart appreciation of Heavenly things.

One who is living in unrepented-of sin is in no condition to appreciate the deep things of God; for Jehovah has declared that "none of the wicked shall understand," but only the Heavenly wise. (Daniel 12: 10.) God does not wish these glorious things to be understood by the wicked or even by those who prefer earthly things. The Lord is not trying now to break men's hearts. The very reverse is true. It is His design to bind up the broken-hearted—those whose hearts are already broken by the experiences of life. The Message of God speaks peace to those who are looking to Him and seeking for the righteousness which He will provide.

Some, we think, have made a great mistake in thinking that the Gospel is a hammer wherewith to break men's hearts. We believe that the Devil does a great deal of the breaking of hearts. But we know of no commission from the Lord for His people to do so. In the great Time of Trouble, even now coming upon the world, many hard hearts will be broken because of conditions resulting from man's selfishness and sin. This breaking up of men's hearts will do them good, bringing them into a humble, teachable condition where the Voice of God may be heard. During the incoming Age, the Lord will take away the stoniness of heart from mankind and will give them hearts of flesh. Instead of being callous and selfish, men's hearts will gradually become soft, tender, kind, gentle.—Ezekiel 11:19; 36: 26.

Gospel Call for Meek Only.

But now, in advance of the Messianic Kingdom, God is seeking those whose hearts are already in a receptive attitude. On one occasion our Lord Jesus quoted: "The Spirit of the Lord is upon Me (Christ); because He hath anointed Me to preach Good Tidings to the meek; He hath sent Me to bind up the broken-hearted, to proclaim liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison to them that are bound." (Isaiah 61: 1-3.) This is the Divine commission for the Gospel Age. So we are especially to seek for the meek, the teachable. The proud and haughty are not in the heart attitude to be blessed by the Gospel Message. The Lord is not looking for such characters to compose the Body of Christ. He will deal with them later.

This is an important point to be borne in mind by those who desire to present the Truth to others. If, when the Message is being presented, any attend who have not the hearing ear, it will bear no fruit in them. But as Christian people we should know how to deal with such. We should give them the thought that they will not see the Divine Plan clearly unless they fully consecrate themselves to God and receive the gift of the Holy Spirit; for unless one becomes a New Creature in Christ he will never understand the Divine Plan. 2 Corinthians 5:17; 1 Corinthians 2:14.

But if the Lord's ambassadors find one who realizes that he is a sinner weary of sin, and who feels his need of a strong Burden-bearer, a Saviour, let them remind him of the Master's words, "Come unto Me, all ye that labor and are heavy-laden, and I will give you rest." Point him to the right path, and say, "This is the way; walk in it." Show him the steps which he must take to become a disciple of Christ. The step of turning from sin is sometimes spoken of as conversion, and it is a conversion to some extent. Whoever seeks to draw near to God will seek to leave sin. Whoever continues to live in sin wishes to be far from God.

The repentant one must not only turn from sin, but must accept the Lord Jesus Christ as his Saviour. He must turn fully to God and give himself, with all that he has or hopes to have, to the Lord in entire surrender. He must renounce his human nature to be a joint-sacrificer with the Lord Jesus, in order that he may be begotten to the new spiritual nature, to be thenceforth a New Creature in Christ. Then our Lord Jesus becomes his Advocate. He receives the robe of Christ's imputed righteousness, covering all his imperfections.

The Work of the Advocate.

An advocate is one who pleads the cause of another, standing as his representative. The word is used as a synonym of the word attorney, lawyer, a representative at a court of law. All mankind, represented in Father Adam, stood before the Divine Court of the Universe. Father Adam was on trial, and was sentenced to death. He was a sinner, and all of his posterity have been born in a sin and death condition. If any of the Adamic race would now come back to the Divine Court and ask that as far as he was concerned the record of sin be blotted out, the great Court of Heaven would say to him, "We cannot receive you; for We do not receive sinners. The only way to approach Us is through the Advocate whom We have appointed—Jesus Christ, the Righteous."

Our text says, "We [the Church] have an Advocate with the Father." Our Lord Jesus Christ became the Advocate of the Church after His resurrection, when He ascended on High and appeared in the presence of God for His followers. (Hebrews 9:24.) This word "appeared" is a legal term. A lawyer appears for his client when he goes into court and gives his name as his client's representative. Thenceforth the court refers to the lawyer anything that it has to say regarding that particular case. When our Lord ascended on High, He appeared in the Divine Presence for His Church, not for the world. The world wishes to forget God, having no hope and busy with its own affairs. Furthermore, Satan has so blinded the majority of mankind that they do not desire to have an Advocate with the Father. Only a few feel their need of the Advocate—those who desire to come into fellowship with God.

Our Lord Jesus appeared for the whole Church at once; for this was the Divine arrangement. In His Wisdom God foreknew just what He would do. He had foreordained the Call of the Gospel Church, the number of the Elect, and the character which they must attain. They must become copies of His dear Son. They must become living sacrifices, holy, desirous of pleasing God. (Romans 8:28, 29, 30; 12:1.) The work of the entire Gospel Age is the finding of this class; and at the very beginning of the Age Christ Jesus appeared in the Heavenly Court as the Advocate for all who would come to the Father through Him. There He made a presentation of His sacrificial merit to the Heavenly Father on behalf of the Church. He advocates our cause by imputing to us the merit of His sacrifice, thus making us presentable in the Father's presence and acceptable as sons of God.—John 9: 12; 1 John 2:2.

Because of this advocacy those who have offered themselves in full consecration to God have, through Jesus Christ, received the Holy Spirit and have been begotten as New Creatures. As such they still need their Advocate; for they cannot do the things that they would—cannot fully control the imperfections of the flesh. Hence they need the Throne of Grace and an Advocate through whom they may maintain their relationship with the Father; for although our Advocate cancelled all sins and weaknesses resulting from Adam's sin, yet there are daily trespasses, daily shortcomings, for which we must daily ask forgiveness.

Experiences in the Narrow Way.

From the moment that one who has forsaken sin, accepted Christ as his Redeemer, and presented himself to God in full consecration, the old nature is reckoned dead and the New Creature is begotten of the Holy Spirit. Thenceforth his human body is counted as the property of the New Creature, and is to be quickened, energized, by the Holy Spirit or God, in order to serve the interests of the new nature. The natural tendencies must now be crucified, and the affections and aspirations trained Heavenward. This will be a continuous work until the death of the human body. But grace and help are furnished by the Lord, through study of the Word of God, through daily providences in life, through prayer, and often through the helpful ministrations of the brethren. Prunings and disciplinings will be applied by the Lord, in order that the character may be developed and crystallized, and thus the New Creature made ready for the Kingdom.

Our ability as New Creatures to endure faithfully is in proportion to our appreciation of the "Heavenly things. When first we came in to Christ, we saw only in a measure. We could suffer somewhat; we could sacrifice a little. "God kindly veiled our eyes to an extent until we had grown stronger. Gradually He showed us more and more what we comprehended in our consecration. He showed us a little more than we could do for Him. As we followed the light, it grew brighter. Faithfulness, obedience, light, and knowledge kept pace with each other.

The Christian walk is a path that "shines more and more unto the perfect Day." (Proverbs 4:18.) It is a path that indeed shows more and more the sufferings with Christ, but not necessarily more of unhappiness—quite the reverse. Instead of meaning unhappiness to the true child of God, it means greater joy; for the sufferings of Christ participated in by His people bring the highest and sweetest joy. As the Apostle declared, we rejoice in tribulation. We recall how he learned to rejoice in tribulation himself. In the city of Philippi, with their backs bleeding from the scourge, with their feet fast in the stocks, St. Paul and Silas could rejoice and sing praises to the Lord because they were accounted worthy to suffer for Christ's sake.—Acts 16: 23-25; Romans 5:1-5.

Cutting and Polishing of Jewels.

The Apostle Peter, who also rejoiced in his sufferings for Christ, says that when severe experiences come upon us for Christ's sake we should remember that "the Spirit of glory and of God resteth upon us." (1 Peter 4: 12-16.) We are assured that in proportion as we are found faithful, and worthy to suffer for Christ's sake, we may expect a heavier, richer weight of glory in the future. So this matter of suffering with Christ in the flesh is something that the Christian can appreciate and enjoy; for it is a witness of the Spirit that we belong to Christ.—Romans 8: 16-18.

In His Word the Lord gives us a picture of the experiences of the Church. He tells us that we are His jewels, now being made ready to be mounted. When His jewels are all gathered and placed in the Kingdom, they are to be a royal diadem in His hand. (Malachi 3: 16, 17; Isaiah 62: 1-3.) If we are the Lord's jewels, taken from the earth to be prepared as precious gems, we may expect to receive the trials and tribulations necessary to this end. A jewel that is uncut and unpolished is worth but little; that is to say, it would have no value were it to remain uncut. The real value is brought forth in the cutting and polishing. So the Lord gives His children, His jewels, the necessary cutting and polishing to enable them to reflect the glorious light of His goodness by and bye.

A small diamond can be cut more easily, and requires less polishing, than a large diamond. The larger the diamond, the more work must be put upon it and the greater its value; and the more gloriously will it show forth the skill of the hand that prepared it. So let us hope, dear brethren, that we may be large jewels in the Lord's hands, that we may be accounted worthy of a good deal of cutting and polishing, that by His grace—

"We may have a glorious part
When grace hath well refined our heart."

The Jewels Soon to Be Mounted.

We are instructed in the Lord's Word that when all the jewels are ready, Jehovah will "make up" His jewels. When a jeweler wishes to arrange a gorgeous collection of precious stones into a cabinet, he selects with great care the stones he wishes to use, and arranges them in their places, deciding the relative position of each to the others, in order that each will shed upon the others more or less of beauty. This is called making up the jewels. This well illustrates what the Lord is doing.

Throughout the entire Gospel Age God has been gathering out from the world a select class, which He has been cutting and grinding as jewels, preparatory to setting them in the gold of the Divine nature. (2 Peter 1:4.) Those that contained flaws He has laid aside; for they could not bear the necessary processes, could not reflect the Lapidary's skill. Only those that would submit to all the preparation needed could be used. Now, at the close of the Age, the jewels are being "made up." They are being gathered together and arranged into a glorious Diadem. They are now being set in the gold of the Divine nature, as they are being taken out of [illegible] beyond the veil. The moment of their death is now the moment of their glorious "change."—1 Corinthians 15: 50-53.

Faithful Jewel Class to Be Known.

Glorious indeed will this great Diadem of God be when completed. But the Almighty is not to wear it upon His head. There is no such incongruous picture given in the Bible. There we read that His jewels are to be a Diadem, a glorious Crown, in the hand of our God. He will so turn it around in the light that all of His intelligent creatures may behold its glory. He will show forth those priceless gems which He has been cutting, grinding, and polishing for the past eighteen hundred years. Angels and men will know something of the grandeur of these jewels.

The question has sometimes been asked, "Will the world ever know the names of those who constitute the jewel class?" We answer, Yes: they will know. It is written in the Word, "And of Zion it shall be said, This and that man was born in her." (Psalm 87:5.)

It is a matter of the utmost importance that we keep our names written in "the Lamb's Book of Life." It is one thing to have our names written, but another to have them remain there. If we would not have ours blotted out, we must be wholly faithful to our covenant with the Lord. We must confess Christ in all the affairs of life; for if we deny Him, He will deny us. Whether we eat or drink, or whatever we do, let us do all to the glory of God. Our Lord declares that if we thus confess Him, He will not deny us, but will confess us before His Father in Heaven.

The marriage of the Church to her Lord is well illustrated in an old-time Jewish wedding. It was customary for each guest, on arriving at the home where the wedding was to take place, to be given a simple white robe, known as a wedding garment. (Matthew 22: 1-14.) When the guests had put on these robes, they looked alike. So it is with those who have been clothed in the robe of Christ's imputed righteousness, covering the imperfections of their flesh.

Thus we see the necessity for prayer and for the forgiveness of sins. All unrighteousness is sin; and sin constitutes a spot upon these robes. Whoever finds that his robe is spotted should go at once to the Fountain of Cleansing which God has provided—the blood of Jesus Christ. There he will find mercy, and grace to help in time of need.

APPRECIATE ENGLAND

Generosity of Nation at War Amazes a Neutral

The Philadelphia Ledger said: No one who sees an English newspaper can fail to be impressed with the generous energy of the English people, even at this time of trial, far closer to not their own. They have their share of suffering from the war to bear; wounded and crippled soldiers returning home, families in straits because the bread-winner is away, incomes reduced by heavy taxes. The demand on their resources and on their sympathies is very great. Yet they are working quite as zealously as Americans, who are at a safe distance from the conflict, for the victims of German ambitions in other lands. They are raising funds and giving personal service for their allies almost as if they were at peace.

CRAZY OVER CANADIANS

Wounded Had Fine Reception From English People

Pte. J. C. Henderson of a Toronto Highland battalion, writes as follows from hospital at Westcliff-on-Sea, England: "I was the first Canadian to come here from the Ypres battle. The people knew we were coming and were all down at the pier. As soon as I came to the edge of the boat two men picked me up and carried me through the crowd. I never heard such shouting. I thought peace had been declared. Then they began shouting 'Good old Canada!' I felt lonesome. I wondered if it would be anything like that at home. I was put into an auto and brought up here. It was just like Toronto Exhibition all the way up. Everyone seems to have gone crazy over the Canadians."

Appointment For Mr. W. A. Sucee

Mr. W. A. Sucee, of Kindersley, Saskatchewan, has been appointed deputy sheriff of Kindersley district which comprises seventy-two townships. Mr. Sucee is a son of Mr. Joseph Sucee of this city and a brother of Sergeant-Major Sucee, now stationed in Kingston. On two different occasions Mr. W. A. Sucee has volunteered to serve overseas, but has been turned down by the medical examiners. On the occasion of his new appointment Mr. Sucee was presented with a beautiful tie pin set with pearls accompanied by an address expressive of regret at his departure from Kindersley. Mr Sucee's new duties will take him into another part of Saskatchewan.

The appended press notice relative to Mr. Sucee's departure was taken from a Saskatchewan paper:

"We note in a recent issue of this paper, that our old friend W. A. Sucee is the subject of a farewell address from the Kindersley Epworth League. We are greatly impressed by the value of Mr. Sucee's services to Kindersley and surrounding districts. We never really appreciated him sufficiently when he was in our midst; and yet I believe we really benefitted by his presence. Truly "A prophet is not without honour, save in his own country." God be with him till we meet again."

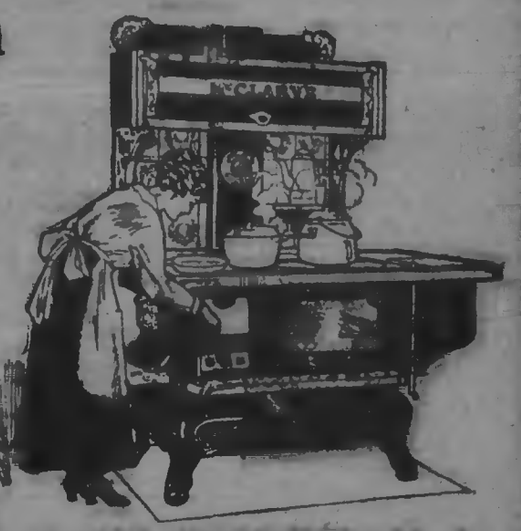
How often do you fix the fire?



It's quite a part of the day's work to look after the range. Day after day for months at a stretch there is the shaking down and making up of the fire. It is work that we have tried to lessen in making the Pandora. And this is how:

To clean the ashes out of the fire-box you simply turn the grate-handle over once and back as illustrated. Or if there are a lot of ashes, repeat the operation. That is all.

The Pandora triple grates work easily because each of the three grates is shaken separately. It will be found that they turn smoothly after years of use. And the fire-box being made of McClary semi-steel, is smooth, allowing the ashes to drop easily instead of clinging to the sides as in the case of rougher metals.

In taking out the ashes, there is no need of spilling them over the floor. The ash-pan is made large enough to hold more than one day's ashes.

The same thought is given to every feature that might save a little time and labor in the kitchen.

HARD HIT BY THE WAR.

Lawyers and Hotel Men in Germany Ask Aid from the State.

Lawyers and hotel men in Germany have been particularly hard hit through the conditions produced by the war, says the Strassburger Post. The war fund of the Sawyers' Association is said to be exhausted, while the requests for aid are increasing daily. Consequently, the Executive committee of the association has asked the Federal Council to increase the lawyers' legal fees, at last, for the duration of the war.

As the result of the number of their guests having fallen off as much as 60 per cent. in some cases, while the cost of operation has steadily risen, the hotel owners are so severely embarrassed financially that their association has asked the State to relieve from municipal taxes, as well as to suspend the amortization clause in their mortgages and prolong the legal delay allowed for the payment of interest.

OFFICIAL TEUTON TRIUMPHS.

(According to the Vossische Zeitung, the Kaiser has issued an order to secure uniformity in "the celebration of victories." In future the Prussian Minister of War will decide what is and what is not "a victory," and when a victory is official, orders will be issued for the hoisting of flags on public buildings and the firing of salutes, while the ecclesiastical authorities will send out telegrams ordering the ringing of church bells.)

When may you boom a Victory, and why?
Who gives you leave to let the bunting fly?
And loud carillons rock the staggered steeples?
Official lips alone can state
Whether the facts demand a fete,
And not the common people's.

A private citizen should never cheer,
Or drink delight of battle with his beer,
Or touch off cannons at his own volition.
True sons of Germany will not
Do anything until they've got Authority's permission.

So don't expand the individual chest
Over our fine offensive in the West
For joy of some obscure affair of pickets;
But rather stand in silent queues
Till we announce the sort of news
That warrants Victory-tickets.

Nor yet indulge in desultory shouts
Based on the news that our intrepid scouts are busy ravaging Rumania's borders:
Wait for a real official scoop,
Then let the total nation whoop
By military orders.

Trust us, ere long, to organise a show
Where in the wind all flags at once shall blow
With general salvos uniformly flashing;
As, when the Lusitania sank,
With one accord we danced and drank
And had the joy-bells clashing.

When we have flattened London's final street,
And for a second time our glorious fleet
Sets ocean from the tyrant's cruel spell free,
Wave, flags! and, cannon, belch your fire!
And to your flocks, ye bishops, wire,
Saying, "Bring down the heifry!"
—O. S., in Punch.

CLUB OFFICERS ARE SUSPENDED

Civil Service Organization in Ottawa Agog Over Scandal—And for Fraser's Son is Involved—Charges That Canvassers Made Threats Investigated by Ministers

OTTAWA, Oct. 21.—The Ottawa Civil Service is seething with excitement over the scandal which has developed in connection with the Ottawa Civil Service Club. Two officials have been suspended, W. A. Fraser, of the Agricultural Department, a son of Mr. John Fraser, the Auditor-General, and Mr. Edward A. Miles, of the Customs Department.

A committee of the Cabinet consisting of Hon. Dr. Reid, Hon. Martin Burrell and Hon. Arthur Meighen is investigating the affair and held another meeting yesterday morning when members of the Executive were on the carpet and there probably will be further suspensions.

The Civil Service Club is an Ottawa social club founded a number of years ago by the civil servants and run as an ordinary club. The hard times, the war and recently the introduction of prohibition has hit the club hard and it has had difficulties financially. Various schemes to raise money were suggested and finally a scheme was evolved of obtaining charter members. F. L. Ebbetts, a Toronto promoter, was engaged to undertake the campaign.

SERVICES ENLISTED.

The executive decided to enlist the services of Mr. Ebbetts and his assistants. The scheme was to solicit life memberships at $250 each and the members have been told that of each $250 Ebbetts was to get $125 according to the agreement. Business apparently flourished. Ebbetts was in Toronto and an assistant named Hood was in Montreal. It was the latter who "spilled the beans."

According to information sent to Ottawa he went to firms and contractors having to do with the Government and asked them to join; representing himself as from this or that department. Several decided to join and paid up, but a snag was struck with one big concern that does a large business in its line and makes munitions on the side. They could not see the advantage of joining such a club and said so. The canvasser is alleged to have told the manager that in his dealings with the Customs Department his refusal would not do him any good.

DISAVOWALS BY EXECUTIVE

Hood is said to carry a letter of introduction from Miles, secretary of the club, who was an employe of the Customs Department, when the case was reported to Hon. Dr. Reid. Miles was suspended immediately. Fraser's suspicion followed yesterday's hearing. Hon. Martin Burrell dealt with his case. Others will be on the carpet.

The members of the club executive disavow Hood and his works. They say the life membership campaign was instituted as a business proposition, but deny any knowledge or intent of people being threatened who failed to join and pay. The actual canvassing was left to the outsiders who apparently represented themselves as departmental officials and followed the course they thought would produce the best results.

Big business was in prospect. At the inquiry yesterday afternoon the sub-committee learned that about $6,000 had come in and that more cheques were due. It was reported that the canvassers had a line on two hundred prospective members at $250 each, or $50,000. The scheme would have been profitable both for the club and the canvassers.

MADE ROADS FOR GUNS ACROSS SINAI DESERT

Turks Dug Parallel Trenches and Filled Them With Scrubby Plants.

ROMANI, Egypt, Sept. 15 (Correspondence)—Unique features of warfare were developed, according to military men, in the recent battle of Romani, in which the British defeated the Turks, the invaders losing some 9,000 in dead, wounded and prisoners out of their total of approximately 14,000 men, as has been told in cable advices. The crossing of the Sinai desert with big guns and other war equipment during the heat of Summer was an unprecedented achievement. A representative of The Associated Press who was permitted to travel over the entire battle ground, after the conflict had been told previously by high military authorities that the feat could not be accomplished, and that any force along the Suez Canal would be safe from attack throughout the Summer. One of the few dissentients, however, was Lieut. Gen. Sir Archibald Murray, commander in chief of the British forces in Egypt. Immediately upon his assumption of command here last January he began to prepare for just such an attack, and the victory at Romani was due to his foresight.

The Turkish expedition undoubtedly was engineered by German officers who laid elaborate plans for the advance from the direction of El Arish, a Turkish post on the northern coast, ninety miles from the canal. About half this distance is through a waterless desert, and at this time of year the heat is intolerable. It would be impossible for men to march, for in these sands one sinks to the ankles at every step, and horses are not fitted for work of this kind. The only means of transporting troops and supplies through the loose, deep sands, method employed. About 14,000 of these were used.

Unable to drag the heavy gun carriages through the loose, deep sands, the Turks constructed roads by digging small parallel trenches which would fit the carriage wheels and filling these tracks with the scrubby plants which represented the only vegetable life outside the oases. These wiry plants formed a cushion over which sand was thrown, making a very practicable road for the guns. In some places where the sand was too loose and deep for this track, planks were laid lengthwise under the wheels.

Progress was necessarily slow, and long before the Turks reached the watered positions which they took up some miles in front of Romani the British were ready and waiting for them. The defenders did not attack, for it was the plan to draw the invaders on to an assault if possible. General Murray decided that he would wait a certain length of time and then force the issue if the Turks had not advanced. As he hoped, at midnight on August 3rd the Turks began the attack, which ended in complete disaster for them on August 5th.

GIVES BLOOD IN VAIN

Even That of Fiancee Failed to Save Girl

NEW YORK, Oct. 21.—Even the blood of the man she loved failed to save the life of Miss Marjorie Minot Nichols, who died in her home in Port Richmond, Staten Island.

One week ago Miss Nichols' parents—Dr. and Mrs. Percival K. Nichols—announced her engagement to Palmer Bradner, a young lawyer of Newark. A week before Mr. Bradner had submitted to a blood transfusion operation to save his sweetheart's life. After the operation she rallied bravely, and it was hoped that she was going to win out.

"If love and sacrifice can save her she will live," they said. "But she is a very sick girl."

She planned until her last hours the wedding day. And by her side, believing with her and planning with her, sat the young attorney whose faith was as great as her's.

FEW FOLKS HAVE GRAY HAIR NOW

Druggist Says Ladies Are Using Recipe of Sage Tea and Sulphur

Hair that loses its colour and lustre, or when it fades, turns gray, dull and lifeless, is caused by a lack of sulphur in the hair. Our grandmother made up a mixture of Sage Tea and Sulphur to keep her locks dark and beautiful, and thousands of women and men who value that even colour, that beautiful dark shade of hair, which is so attractive, use only this old time recipe.

Nowadays we get this famous mixture improved by the addition of other ingredients by asking at any drug store for a 50-cent bottle of "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," which darkens the hair so naturally, so evenly, that nobody can possibly tell it has been applied. You just dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears; but what delights the ladies with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound, is that, besides beautifully darkening the hair after a few applications, it also brings back the gloss and lustre and gives it an appearance of abundance.

Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound is a delightful toilet requisite to impart colour and a youthful appearance to the hair. It is not intended for the cure, mitigation or prevention of disease.

Frank McDonald Is Sent Up For Trial On Murder Charge

CHATHAM, Oct. 21.—In the county police court yesterday afternoon Frank McDonald of Ridgetown, held on a charge of causing the derailing of the Michigan Central express on the night of May 31, which resulted in the death of Steven Quinlan and Russell Oakes, fireman and engineer respectively, was sent up for trial on a charge of murder.

The principal witness at the hearing was Mrs. McDonald, wife of the prisoner, who testified that she had overheard the brothers, Frank and Henry, discussing the details of the crime subsequent to the wreck, at which time her husband had remarked to Henry McDonald that if the cause of the wreck was discovered it would be through his wife.

The prisoner verified a sworn statement produced in court in which he admits having participated in the removal of the rail on the track near Ridgetown, which caused the wreck.

Henry McDonald, the brother, will be arraigned on similar charges, and will probably be sent up for trial.

An Inside Bath Makes You Look and Feel Fresh

Says a glass of hot water with phosphate before breakfast keeps illness away.

This excellent, common-sense health measure being adopted by millions.

Physicians the world over recommend the inside bath, claiming this is of vastly more importance than outside cleanliness, because the skin pores do not absorb impurities into the blood, causing ill health, while the pores in the ten yards of bowels do.

Men and women are urged to drink each morning, before breakfast a glass of hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it, as a harmless means of helping to wash from the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels the previous day's indigestible material, poisons, sour bile and toxins; thus cleansing, sweetening and purifying the entire alimentary canal before putting more food into the stomach.

Just as soap and hot water cleanse and freshen the skin, so hot water and limestone phosphate act on the eliminative organs.

Those who wake up with bad breath, coated tongue, nasty taste or have a dull, aching head, sallow complexion, acid stomach; others who are subject to bilious attacks or constipation, should obtain a quarter pound of limestone phosphate at the drug store. This will cost very little but is sufficient to demonstrate the value of inside bathing. Those who continue it each morning are assured of pronounced results, both in regard to health and appearance.

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

MISS' OR LADY'S THREE-GORE SKIRT.

By Anabel Worthington.

The design in the illustration is a worthy one because it combines the popular "band" feature and the yoke effect without taking the model out of the class of the charmingly simple styles. The yoke is of material cut bias, but this is not really necessary. The upper edges of the gores are gathered and joined to the yoke and a four button-decoration is a further style note.

Bias folds of the material encircle below knee depth and at the lower edge, and buttons keep in line, trimming them in the centre front. The skirt will have its good lines recommend it without the trimming bands if your choice is for the plainer effect. A raised waistline is used, and the width of the lower edge in size 24 is 2½ yards.

This is an excellent design for silk and serge, silk and crepe and similar weaves, and it is easy of the simplest to copy from the pattern.

No. 7,960 is cut in sizes 24 to 34 waist measure. To make in size 24 will require 3¾ yards of 36 inch silk for the gores and for the yoke and trimming bands 1¾ yards 44 inch serge. Without the bands 3¼ yards 36 inch material will be plenty.

You may obtain the pattern by sending 10 cents to the office of this publication.

There is a marked tendency toward the revival of bands on skirts, and because of the practicable use of two materials and 44 inch serge. Without the bands 3¼ yards 36 inch material will be plenty. In a garment the trend will probably be greatly encouraged for fall and winter.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required, and age of a child.

Price 15 cents, or 2 for 25 cents.

Heavy Fighting On Eastern Front

FOUR 93rd MEN ON CASUALTY LIST

Gains and Losses Reported For Russo-Roumanian Forces

Attack Enemy in Transylvania and Compel a Retireme n But Are Themselves Retreating in Dobrudja, Although Maintaining a Stubborn Resistance---British Positions Between Lesars and Guedecourt Heavily Shelled By Enemy But No Important Infantry Actions Are Reported.

A SUMMARY OF TO-DAY'S WAR CABLES

PETROGRAD, October 23. — Russo-Roumanians continue their retirement in Dobrudja under enemy pressure, though offering stubborn resistance, it was officially announced to-day. In the Trotus Ortuz and Stanie valleys in Transylvania the Roumanians attacked the enemy and compelled a slight Austro-German retirement. In Western Modavia the Roumanians have been successful in stubborn fighting. The fighting on the Galician-Volhynian front is slackening. Austro-German attempts to cross the Buldurka north of Brody were repelled by Russian fire.

The Roumanians Are Being Rolled Back

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

LONDON, October 23.—With their lines still intact the Roumanians are being rolled back on a 45-mile front in Dobrudja under tremendous pressure by superior German, Bulgarian and Turkish forces. At the Roumanian capital the situation is regarded as serious, said a Petrograd despatch to-day.

SOFIA, October 23.—The Bulgarian right wing has smashed through the Roumanian defenses and arrived within less than six miles of the important Roumanian seaport of Constanza, it was officially announced to-day.

The capture of the seaport of Tuzla, twelve miles south of Constanza, was reported from Berlin only Saturday afternoon.

The Bulgarian official report, if true, indicates that the Roumanians may have suffered a most severe defeat.

British Positions Are Heavily Shelled

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

LONDON, October 23.—Considerable enemy shelling of British positions between Le Sars and Gueudecourt last night was reported by General Haig to-day but no infantry action of importance occurred on the Somme front. South of Ypres, the British occupied two mine craters.

Assassin Refuses To Explain Act

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

VIENNA, October 23.—At his preliminary examination to-day Fred Adler, assassin of Count Stuerghk, the Austrian Premier, refused to explain the motive for his act. Alder said he killed the Prime Minister without outside advice or instigation. His jailors said he gave the impression of being weak mentally.

Hill No 128 Is Captured By French

Special to The Examiner:

PARIS (French Official), October 23.——Following a short artillery bombardment the French troops late last night stormed and captured Hill No. 128, northwest of Sailly-Saillisel. South of the Somme the Germans bombarded during the night, but made no new attacks.

Since Saturday the French have taken 450 prisoners on the Chaulnes sector. The Germans exploded a mine southwest of Dumouenil, but were unable to occupy the operation.

The Egyptian Troops Make Successful Raid

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

LONDON, October 23.—Deserting their "Ships of the Desert" an Egyptian Camel Corps in armoured cars, swept down upon an enemy camp at Dakhla Oasis capturing 125 prisoners and dispersing the enemy, it was officially announced to-day.

The Motherland has sent out a second appeal for assistance to the British Red Cross.

BRITISH FIGHTING EFFICIENCY SHOWS GREAT DEVELOPMENT

General Haig's Forces Have Taken 30,0000 Prisoners, 21 Villages, 125 Guns, 100 Trench Mortars and 429 Machine Guns

HAVE NOT LOST A GUN

Examiner Special:

NEW YORK, Oct. 23.—In a despatch from the British Western front Frederick Palmer speaks optimistically of the British positions. He says: "More than three and one-half months of battle on the Somme with the heaviest concentration of artillery, infantry, and every type of war material and the most skilful and desperate fighting the world has ever known, has resulted in a marked development of British fighting efficiency and of means of reducing the losses of the attackers.

In the way of concrete achievements the British have taken 30,000 prisoners, or a little less than 1,500 for each of the 21 villages captured with an average population of about three hundred souls.

"They have taken 125 guns, 100 trench mortars and trench guns and 429 machine guns. They have not lost a gun.

"The British have driven the Germans back on a front of eleven miles to a depth of from four to eight miles."

The task of the British was made especially difficult by the fact that they were confronted at the outset with a most powerful line of trench fortifications. Moreover every village was a fortress which had to be besieged and stormed. When Spring comes the peasants will plow and seed ground behind the lines which for two years had laid fallow under the storm of shells. In Fricourt and Mametz villages, taken on July 1st, the trees, with their trunks torn and their foliage blasted by shells, have bravely thrown out fresh sheets, while fresh crops of grass are hiding the shell craters in the neighbouring fields and carpeting the seamed earth trodden by the British in their early charges. Former citizens in the captured villages are requesting that they will be allowed to return to them and build new homes on the ruins of their old ones.

tole Elsie Janis' White Fox Stole

NEW YORK, Oct. 23.—The theft of a white fox stole belonging to Elsie Janis, the actress, at a box party in the Lyric Theatre, on Friday, was revealed when Arthur FitzHom, head usher in the theatre, was arraigned in Magistrate Groehl's court, charged with taking the fur piece. The stole was valued at $1,000. The usher was held in $2,000 bail.

LANCE-CORP. HORACE STANLEY OF PETERBORO' IS KILLED IN ACTION

Another Peterborough Soldier Has Made the Supreme Sacrifice---Four Members of the 93rd Battalion on To-day's List, Three Wounded and One Seriously Ill---Pte. Albert Nicholls on List For Third Time---To-day's General Military News.

Killed in Action.

Lance-Corp. Horace W. Stanley, 455 Stewart street, Canadian Mounted Rifles.

Wounded.

Pte. Percy Mann, 30 Lafayette avenue, Canadian Mounted Rifles, late of 93rd Battalion.

Pte. George J. Stockdale, Canadian Mounted Rifles, late of the 93rd Battalion.

Pte. Walter Goggins, Canadian Mounted Rifles, late of the 93rd Battalion.

Pte. Albert Nicholls, 21st Battalion, (shell shock.)

Seriously Ill.

Pte. Chas. Griffin, 475 Rubidge street, Canadian Mounted Rifles, late of the 93rd Battalion.

Peterborough's honour roll is increasing daily as the terrific fighting on the Somme continues to take its toll among this city's soldiers. To-day's list contains six Peterborough names, one killed in action, four wounded and one seriously ill. Four members of the 93rd Battalion are in to-day's addition to the roll of honour, making a total of eight casualties so far recorded among the officers and men of Peterborough's own battalion.

LANC CORP. H. STANLEY.

It is with deep regret that the Examiner has to announce the death of Lanc Corp. Horace Stanley a Peterborough member of the 5th Canadian Mounted Rifles. An official message received by his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Stanley, 455 Stewart street last evening conveyed the tragic news that the young soldier had been killed in action on October 1st or 2nd.

Lance. Corp. Stanley enlisted in Peterborough in January, 1915 with B squadron, 8th C.M.R. his brother Fred Stanley becoming a member of the same corps at the same time. They trained with the Peterborough squadron here, and at Ottawa and Barriefield going overseas in the latter part of the summer of 1915. After further training in England they were drafted for service in France, Corp. Fred Stanley going to the 4th and his brother to the 5th C.M.R. Both brothers participated in the terrific battle of Zillebeke on June 2nd. Hence escaping without a scratch while Fred's fate is still unknown. He was officially reported missing a few days after and no official news has been heard of him since. Now his younger brother has given his life in defence of the Empire.

Lance. Corp. Stanley was eighteen years of age when he became a member of the C.E.F. He was born in England but had been a resident of Peterborough for about eight years receiving part of his education in the local Central School. At the time of his enlistment he was in the employ of Mr. C. E. Coleman. He was a bomb-thrower with the 5th C.M.R. and usually worked with Pte. Geo. Sadler, a Peterborough boy who was reported wounded on Saturday.

Probably no family has done more for the Empire than have Lanc. Corp. Stanley's. His father, Mr. Wm. Stanley enlisted with the 139th Colouring Battalion but received his discharge on account of being over the age limit. Mrs. Stanley has been one of the leading spirits and hardest workers in the Soldiers' Wives and Mother's Club. In addition to Lanc. Corp. Stanley's brother Fred who is missing there is still another brother in khaki Sergt. Albert Stanley of the 93rd Peterborough battalion.

The young soldier was a bright general youngster who will be greatly missed by many friends.

The surviving relatives are his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Stanley, four brothers, Ernest in the northwest, Sergt. Albert and Corp Fred, C.E.F. and Herbert at home and three sisters, Mrs. Arthur Guffy, Daisy and Maud all residing in Peterborough.

ANOTHER 93RD MAN HIT

Still another former member of the 93rd Battalion has been reported wounded in the person of Pte. Percy Mann, whose father Mr. Sherman Mann, 30 Lafayette Avenue received official news from Ottawa on Saturday that Pte. Mann had been admitted to No. 1 Canadian Stationary Hospital at Etaples, France on Oct. 12th, with a gun shot wound in the head. Pte. Mann enlisted with the 93rd Battalion here a year ago and went overseas as a member of No. 2 Platoon A company. He was selected in the first draft from the 93rd to go to France, being transferred to the 5th C.M.R.

Pte. Geo. J. Stockdale.

Pte. Geo J. Stockdale, who enlisted in Peterborough last winter with the 93rd Battalion and went overseas with Col. Johnston's unit is officially reported wounded in to-day's list from Ottawa. Pte. Stockdale went to France with the first draft of 150 men from the Peterborough battalion and is the sixth member of the draft to be reported wounded in to-day's list from here the Canadian Mounted Rifles. Pte Stockdale went overseas as lance

APPEALS TO EMPLOYERS TO REVISE PAYROLLS

Major Campbell Makes Strong Plea to Manufacturers and Business Men to Give Women a Fair Chance to Take the Places of Men Who Are Needed For the Empire's Work.

MUST ASSIST 247th

The insistent call to the colours was sounded to the men of Peterborough once again at last night's meeting in the armouries in the particular interests of the 247th Battalion. To the employers as urgently as to the employees of the mercantile and manufacturing establishments of this city, Major G. L. Campbell appealed for a serious and immediate consideration of personal and corporate interests in terms of the national and imperial needs with which they are conflicting in the supreme crisis the war has developed in the months that have separated the 93rd Battalion from its home town. Last night's large and enthusiastic assembly, the ringing recruiting speeches, the stirring band selections created the fleeting and happy illusion that the impressive incidents of the first days of the formative period of the 93rd Battalion were being re-enacted. The setting of this fanciful engene was practically identical with their prototype, but there quickly obtruded the thought that the boys in khaki at the meetings a year ago were now probably somewhere along the Somme. A notable similarity was the predominence of women and girls. There was scarcely a handful of men of military age, not to specify the apparently p' sically fit. But the addresses presented a general appeal to parents, to sisters and other girls, to employers and to the young men themselves, and as the first of a series there were elements to last night's meeting that promised success for Peterborough's new battalion Major Duffus presided, introducing Major Campbell, Capt. Kenny of the recruiting staff of the district and Major Frost. Local clergymen occupied places on the platform, also Mr. J. A. Aylmer, president of the Speakers' Patriotic League, His Honour Judge Huycke, and a number of returned soldiers, including Capt. Ackerman and Lieut. Douglas Huycke.

Major Campbell's Appeal.

Major Campbell emphasized the importance of his particular appeal by enumerating some of the most cogent reasons for the continued effort of the Canadian people in assisting to carry on the war to the desired conclusion. The persevering assistance of our allies, the sacrifice of Belgium, the wonderful spirit of France, the great issues at stake, our Sovereign King George V these were all strong grounds for approaching the Canadian public on the question of our future enlistments. But, said Major Campbell, I want to write on the hearts of the men and women of this city, on its pulpits, its press, its business men, an appeal for your co-operation and support, and I make this appeal in behalf of the 200,000 Canadian boys who have gone overseas. We ought to do one of two things, maintain our enthusiasm at home by steadily recruiting men and sending them forward or we are in honour bound to bring them home and let Canada retire from the war. We cannot afford to slacken in any respect. We must continue recruiting for the support of our men at the front and for those who are on the way there.

Speaking For 200,000 Men.

When I speak representing 200,000 men over there, Major Campbell said.

MIDNIGHT BLAZE TOTALLY DESTROYS LEE ST. RESIDENCE

Home of Mrs. A. Huffman Completely Gutted by Flames—Contents Nearly All Burned But Loss is Covered by Insurance

OCCUPANTS WERE AWAY

A midnight blaze totally destroyed the home of A. Huffman, Lee street, last night, the building being gutted and the furniture, with the exception of a few articles on the lower floor, being totally destroyed. Mr. and Mrs. Huffman had been in Millbrook yesterday and on returning to the city, Mr. Huffman left his wife at the home of her mother, Westcott street, while he went home to put on a fire. He then left to bring his wife home, and when they returned the house was in flames. The fire brigade was called out, but could do little except save the houses nearby. The burned building was owned by Dr. Jessie Birnie. It is said the loss is covered by insurance.

No Change In Strike Situation

OTTAWA, Ont., Oct. 23.— In connection with the C.P.R. strike situation Hon. T. W. Crothers is continuing his conference with Sir Robert Borden and others of his colleagues in the hope that some means of settling the difficulty may be arrived at. It is not likely, that the application of the C.P.R. for the appointment of a board of conciliation will be complied with unless the men agree to recognize it.

STREET CAR SERVICE.

In all the stress and strain and struggle of this great war, even our comparatively petty grievances, must, it seems, find expression. Some of us deplore the high cost of living, while others mourn the death of relatives "killed in action". A correspondent of a local journal complains of the complication of street car travel, between Smith street and Jackson Park, requiring two transfers. This is not as convenient as might be, but it does not seem a serious enough matter to justify public complaint, especially when one recalls the many serious troubles that affect us (and when we remember that most of us, individuals and corporations do the best we can. The Street Railway business is conducted for profit; and the profit consists in carrying passengers. The more carried, of course, the larger the receipts; and no doubt cars are run in the interest of the public, as far as circumstances will permit. Doubtless the present arrangement is the best that can be devised. If a better way can be shown by those who consider they have a grievance, the railway would adopt it. It is to its interest to please the public, upon whom its living depends, in the greatest possible degree. It is the rule that individual interest must yield to the considerations involved in the saying—the greatest good to the greatest number.

UPLIFT THE RED CROSS.

The British authorities have made a new appeal to Canada and Canadians to uplift the Red Cross, the modern symbol of the divine gift of human help and healing and relief of suffering made perfect on the Cross of Calvary. We have heretofore heeded the appeal and it is stronger than ever to-day. Red Cross needs are even more numerous and more urgent. Every day and every hour of this awful war adds to the list of wounded and otherwise incapacitated. In this and other issues of the Examiner is found the appeal of the local officials of the British Red Cross. While heed to this appeal comes in the form of a duty to our armies in general and to the cause they are fighting for, it has a more intimate and direct significance for us in Peterborough. We have about two hundred of our very own—our relatives and friends, our fellow citizens—wounded on the field of battle, and now lying in some hospital, or some additions to the number are, perhaps, at this moment lying, more or less seriously wounded, upon the field of battle, or in the red welter of the shell-ploughed trenches. If a relation at home or a neighbour meets with accident of mishap—becomes a wounded soldier on the battle-field of peace—we lose no time to show our sympathy and practical help, and we give, according to our measure of ability. How much more are our wounded soldiers, separated from home and home comforts, deserving of our help?

Not only on grounds of humanity and fellow-feeling, but on the grounds of loyally supporting the cause in which our soldiers were and are, being summoned, are we called upon. With care and the tending and nursing; with adequate Red Cross dressings and supplies we facilitate the restoration of the less seriously hurt to health and strength and fitness for again taking their fighting places in the battle line. We may not be able or fit to fight. We may not be doing at present all we can to strengthen the forces by following up enlistment, but we can give, and thus not only relieve suffering and help healing, but materially help the work of keeping up our contingents to strength.

There will be opportunity for the remainder of the month to swell the amount of the Fund. The City Council has done well in voting five thousand as the foundation of Peterborough's Red Cross fund. By this means every ratepayer will contribute a pro rata share; but there are many hundreds, if not thousands, who will not feel satisfied with discharge of duty by contributing by piecemeal taxes spread over many years to the five thousand; they will feel impelled to add at once more substantial sums. There is no more doubt of the worthiness than of the needs of the Red Cross work. Contributions may be made to the end of the month, and left at the Post Office or at the offices of any of the local banks or of the newspapers.

RECRUITS WANTED.

Up to October 1st the total number of Canadian enlistments had reached a total of 365,867, leaving 145,000 to be still recruited to make up the promised 500,000 troops from Canada. Of the total so far enlisted Ontario has supplied almost half and the other provinces the remainder. Quebec has supplied 38,645, a small number compared to the total. Is it small, other things considered? We speak of the 365,000 as Canada's contribution. These men have gone from Canada, but what proportion of them are native Canadians? If we could have the enlistments differentiated according to birth, we might find a disappointingly large number were British born; and we might find, on the basis of Canadian birth, that the enlistments from Quebec, with few outborn population, were not so disproportionate in numbers as they seem to be with regard to the whole volume of enlistment. We are pretty well assured, without exact records, that we chiefly owe our credit for large enlistments to British-born, who have made their homes in Canada, and have enlisted with great spontaneity. If Canadian-born have not heretofore done as much as the British-born to swell the Canadian contingents, the duty of present action is all the more strongly imposed. We need soldiers at the front, to not only fill up the thinning ranks of Canadian troops, but to help in the final crushing of militarism. We must not delude ourselves with the idea that our work is nearly over; that the end is to-morrow, or next month. We must prepare for continuing the fight till victory comes, be that near or far. The London Times says:

> We must think, and act, and organize as though Germany meant to go on "to the last breath of horse and man," and, above all else, must we organize our manpower until our superiority of numbers in the field is absolutely annihilating.

We have in Petesborough, city and county, hundreds of born-Canadians, fight to fight, who are not in the ranks. If they do a little solid, solemn thinking, as to their duty at this time of crisis, they will see that their place is not in the ease and comfort of peaceful home occupation; they will feel that the call of the hour is the call to manhood. Every fit man who lives under the shelter of the flag has imposed upon him the duty to keep the old flag flying. If he can fight, he should fight; if he is, by age or infirmity, out of the fighting game, he can do his fighting by helping Red Cross work and other auxiliary agencies. The peace reserves of the army can do as virtually effective work as the men with the gun. The man with the gun is, however, the chief need of the present, and every man fit to fight should get into khaki.

Wrist Watch To Monaghan Soldier From May's School

Private James Connors of Byersville who enlisted with Queen's Field Ambulance was recently presented with an address and presentation from the pupils and staff of May's School. The address was as follows:

S. S. No. 2 Monaghan

October 19, 1916

Dear Jim,—We, the pupils of May's School, desire you to accept this wrist watch as a small token of our regard for you and to express our pride of you, the first pupil of our school to enlist for overseas service.

It is with mingled feelings of pleasure and regret that we bid you farewell. Pleased that one of our boys responded to the call of King and Country in the defence of liberty. Regret to lose you from our midst and that it entails such danger and sacrifice for you.

We the pupils left behind, shall always remember you and shall strive to so live that we may prove worthy of enjoying the liberties that you, as well as thousands of others, have gone forth to defend.

Hoping that you have a safe voyage across and are spared to return to your home and friends once again we bid you good-bye.

Signed on behalf of the school.

PRESBYTERIANS AND ORGANIC CHURCH UNION

Evidently a strong element in the Presbyterian Church is opposed to union. Sir Mortimer Clark laid emphasis on the question of doctrine, in regard to which he said there had been a conspiracy of silence. Perhaps there has been not so much a conspiracy as a gradual decline in the emphasis laid on doctrinal teaching. And probably the action taken by the dissentients is due largely to natural reluctance to break with history, and to give up a historic name and a distinctive organization and form of worship. The sentiment that is invoked is akin to patriotism.

It is not for a secular journal to attempt to judge upon such matters. Our main concern is in the work of the churches in regard to citizenship and the welfare of Canadians. And in this respect it is cheering to know that even if there be no organic union there may be unity of purpose and fraternal co-operation. There is to-day little evidence of suspicion or ill-will among Protestant denominations. Between Protestant and Catholic there unhappily is still some lack of confidence and failure on the part of one to recognize the good in the other. Still we do find Protestants and Catholics working together for social reform and the betterment of humanity. The resolution passed at the meeting in Old St. Andrew's Church contains this passage:

> We, members of the Presbyterian Church in Canada, assembled in St. Andrew's Church, Toronto, whilst affirming our belief in the spiritual unity of all believers, our cordiality towards our brethren of other communions and our willingness for all feasible co-operation with them in the interests of the Kingdom of God, express our conviction that the time has not arrived for the discontinuance of the Presbyterian Church in Canada."

Whatever may be the fate of the proposal for organic union, there is good ground for hope that the spirit of this resolution will be observed. There is a tremendous work to be done in common, and the churches cannot afford to dissipate their energies. Canada has a population of less than eight millions, in a territory destined to be the home of a hundred millions of people. A process of blending and assimilation is required to make good Canadians of all these people. That does not mean uniformity. Good citizenship is compatible with the existence of many different types, and with the largest liberty of thought and action. But we do require a spirit that will lead to free and hearty co-operation in the noble work of nation-building.—Toronto Star.

corporal, but threw up his stripe when he was drafted. He was one of the members of the battalion who took the special course in bayonet fighting at London, Ont. Just before the 93rd went overseas, like Pte. Griffin, reported seriously ill to-day, he was a member of the 93rd's crack soccer team. Pte. Stoodale's relatives are in England.

Pte. Walter Goggins.

Pte. Walter Goggins, a well known member of the 93rd Battalion is to-day officially reported wounded. Pte. Goggins enlisted here in August of last year, being among the first to join the Peterborough battalion. He was a member of No. 2 platoon, A company until he went overseas, when he went to France with the first draft from the 93rd Battalion, going to the Canadian Mounted Rifles. Pte. Goggins had no relatives here, his next of kin residing in England. He had resided in Peterborough county for eight or nine years and was well known in Peterborough. Young Goggins was a "character" in the battalion, and every officer and man knew him.

PTE. ALBERT NICHOLLS

Mr. A. Nicholls, pianist of the Grand Opera House orchestra has received a card from his son, Pte. Albert Nicholls of the 21st Battalion, stating that he has been admitted to No. 12 General Hospital, suffering from shell shock. Twice before Pte. Nicholls has been on the casualty list. He enlisted here in September, 1914, with the 57th quota to the 21st Battalion.

PTE. CHAS. GRIFFIN.

Mr. Wm. T. Griffin, 475 Rubidge street has received an official announcement from Ottawa that his son Pte. Chas. Griffin formerly of the 93rd Battalion and now with the Canadian Mounted Rifles is seriously ill and admitted to No. 9 General Hospital, Rouen, on October 20th. The cause is not stated in the message received so that Mr. Griffin is at a loss to know whether his son has been wounded or not. Pte. Griffin was one of the first to enlist in the 93rd Battalion, joining in August of last year. He was a member of No. 2 Platoon A company and went over to France in the first draft from the 93rd going to the C.M.R. Pte. Griffin is a crack soccer goal keeper and alternated between the posts with Sergt.-Major Calladine on the crack regimental team of the 93rd. His brother Sergt. F. Griffin went overseas as a member of the 2nd Battalion while his brother Sergt.-Major Playford is with the 93rd Battalion.

SERGT. H. G. EDMISON.

Sergt. H. G. Edmison, the report of whose death at the front appeared in Friday's Examiner was the son of Mr. R. J. Edmison, Chemong Road. He enlisted in Toronto with the 58th Battalion and had been at the front for some time. He was twenty-seven years of age and unmarried. Sergt. Edmison was educated in the Peterborough Collegiate Institute and had been on the staff of the Toronto Globe for two years before enlisting. A host of friends in the district heard of his death with deep regret.

Writing to his mother, Pte. Stanley Garrett who went overseas with the 2nd Battalion and has been wounded several times says: "God has spared me through the last battle we were in and we know who is our deliverer safely through all troubles. Thanks for your part in prayer for my deliverance. Well dear mother, I am fine and as happy as ever. Bryce Carpenter is out here. I hope Will doesn't come out for a while, although he is anxious to get a wallop at the Germans, but believe me they won't fight when you get near them. We have a good go at them and they get down on their knees and yell "Mercy, Kamerad". A lot of them are taken prisoners. Since I last wrote our boys have had a good chance to get their own back, but the Germans don't stand long for the bayonet. They run like cowards.

Pte. Harry Borland, of the 93rd Batt., writes home to his parents at Indian River, as follows:

Dear Mother and Family,—Your letters received and was very glad to hear from you. When the bugle sounds the mail call you can bet we are all on the jump to get it and if you could only see the disappointed look of some of the boys when time after time they answer that bugle call in good hope, only to see all the mail distributed to the luckier boys, you would be sorry for them. I tell you England is some country. We are having a good time. We are allowed six to nine days' leave, and I take all that is coming to me. I was in the orderly hut the other day getting a six days' pass when someone hollered, "There is a Zeppelin just going over our tent." The next minute I looked round but could see nothing for dust. It took me from eighteen to twenty minutes to get back to that tent. But when I got my pass, I struck for Ashford to spend a jolly week. The officers get very excited when there is a Zeppelin in sight. One night a Zeppelin was seen over our hut. We were all ordered out in single file to a fence.

We get some pretty hard drill here. We have to march eighteen miles for musketry practice about every week. The 98th from Niagara beat us by one hour. They beat all previous records. Then we have to practice trench work. It is common to be routed out of bed about 12 and be marched three or four miles with shovel and full kit to dig a trench and stay in it till morning. You mustn't go to sleep, either. We were put through examination again. I passed in everything until it came to the age and the officer wouldn't believe I was twenty. He said I was only 17, so they put me down for permanent base duty. But I don't want it. They are now taking men to the front under 19 or over 40 years.

The cannon is more than rumbling now. But something is doing. I may get to the trenches if I kick good and hard. Don't forget to write soon and write to all the Indian River boys, for their thoughts are of their home town constantly.—Your loving son, Harry.

RESULTS OF DEBATE MORE FAVOURABLE THAN HAD BEEN EXPECTED

John Redmond's Speech on Irish Situation in House Excited More Interest Than Anything That Has Occurred in Parliament Since the Beginning of the War—106 Members Voted With Redmond.

By T. P. O'CONNOR

LONDON, Oct. 21.—John Redmond's debate on the Irish situation in the House of Commons excited more interest than anything that has occurred in Parliament since the beginning of the war. The results of this debate were more favourable to the Irish cause that the most sanguine of the Irish members dared hope. One part of his case, as stated —namely, the gross mismanagement of the recruiting campaign in Ireland, has been admitted with practical unanimity. Chief Secretary Duke and Premier Asquith even more frankly than Lloyd George admitted that incredible blunders had been committed by the War Office. The Unionist journals all repeat the confession.

Redmond's speech was lucid, restrained in tone and packed full of facts dispassionately narrated. It was listened to with respectful silence with few interruptions from the Tories. There was an occasional cheer from the Liberal and Labour benches, especially when he contrasted his courageous support of the war with the persistent and fatuous interference of the War Office. The tone of all the Ministers was apologetic. The most remarkable proof of the success of Redmond's indictment was the division it brought about in Commons, when forty-seven Liberals and Labourites voted with Redmond against the Ministry. The big vote of 106 for Redmond was the largest minority yet recorded since the opening of the war against the Ministry.

Back Redmond.

The Liberal papers all back Redmond's case, even so pronounced and faithful a supporter of Liberalism and of Asquith, as the Daily News, charges the Premier with want of courage of decision in his treatment of the whole Irish question, especially blaming him for his weak yielding to Lord Lansdowne and other Tory leaders who broke down the Lloyd George settlement at the eleventh hour.

The most important question of the immediate future, the Home Rule situation, still remains uncertain, yet there are some things that clearly evolve from the debate. First, a majority of the Liberals and all of the Labourites are in favour of putting the Home Rule Act into immediate operation. Second, the Liberal and most of the Tory members of the Cabinet, are ready and anxious to make a second attempt to find a solution of the Home Rule question.

On this point Lloyd George's speech was especially noteworthy. He first promised an entire amendment of the treatment of the Irish regiments, and a second point, remarkable from so pronounced an advocate of conscription was his declaration that England must postpone any thought of conscription in Ireland until Irish opinion was improved by concessions to Irish national sentiment. Third, he made a fervent appeal to all parties in England and Ireland to co-operate in another attempt to make an agreement which would make immediate Home Rule possible.

The House Moved.

Never have I seen the House of Commons listen with more rapt silence to a speech, as to the simple, eloquent and deeply moved words of Lloyd George in making the appeal, showing that he represented the passionate and practically unanimous sentiment of all England, that before England can go into a peace conference to defend the rights of small nations and the recognition of the principle of nationality in reshaping the map of Europe, she must first have settled with her own small nation and recognized its principle of nationality. It must be confessed that until the Sinn Fein prisoners now confined in detention camps are released, until the treatment of men now undergoing penal servitude, already somewhat mitigated, is entirely transformed, and early and complete amnesty promised; and until the fiercely exasperated opinion of Ireland is further appeased, no renewal of the attempt at settlement of the Home Rule question has much chance of success. But with the return of the Irish people to their old faith in the constitutional movement of the Irish party with strong pressure on the Ministry and a practically unanimous opinion in Parliament favouring an early settlement, there is good ground for hoping that we may see the end of the long struggle before many months, certainly before the end of the war.

The sea-divided Gael, as the Irish orator is in the habit of saying, represents the fact that there is not one but many Irelands beside the Ireland within the Irish seas. There is an Ireland in the United States; there is an Ireland in the British Dominions of Australia and Canada, and there is another Ireland, of which perhaps not so much is heard—the Ireland in Great Britain. Yet that latter section of the Irish race may well demand some attention. It now amounts to nearly two and a half millions of people; it is Nationalist to a man; it amounts to two-thirds of the entire Nationalist population of Ireland herself. Let me give my recent experience of a visit to Liverpool — which is really the capital of Irish Nationality in Great Britain—as some indication of what the Ireland within the shores of Great Britain thinks and feels about the war.

Tay Pay's Position.

Everybody knows my position; I took it on the first day of the war; I have adhered to it without a moment's hesitation or doubt ever since. To me it has always been, it is and it will be a war between civilization and savagery, between Christian and Pagan ideals, between democracy and despotism, between liberty and slavery. But one might well doubt whether the rank and file of the Irish in Liverpool might not have undergone the same process of disintegration as has come unfortunately on the Irish at home. The ties between Liverpool and Ireland are very close, not merely because a fourth, if not close upon a third, of the entire population of Liverpool is Irish, but because the trade relations between Liverpool and Ireland are so close and intimate that the two cities are in constant intercommunication and intercommunion. Irish cattle are brought over every week by Irish salesmen; Irish provisions land by every Irish boat; and the distance between the city and Liverpool is so brief and can be done by such excellent boats, that there is a constant going and coming of all the sections of Irishmen for pleasure, for vacation, for visiting friends, apart altogether from the close and large commercial ties. It was impossible, therefore, to tell beforehand whether some of the virus of Sinn Feinism and other popular lunacies in Ireland, should not have spread to the Irish in Liverpool in these topsy-turvy times.

Liverpool and Sinn Feiners.

It would be perhaps an exaggeration to say that there isn't a Sinn Feiner in Liverpool; there are a few: indeed it is reported that some of the number left Liverpool to take part in the recent rebellion; but they are so few that really it requires some investigation to find them. At the beginning of the war, perhaps the half-hundred or so who adhered to the new doctrines of revolt from the constitutional movement, sought to interrupt the meetings which were held throughout Liverpool by the leaders of our organization, the United Irish League there. But they were confronted quite openly and boldly wherever they appeared. The Irish in Liverpool are fortunate in having been able to organize their forces with great success. The Liverpool Municipality is the only one in Great Britain where there is a distinct Irish party—fifteen in number—with their own chairman, their own secretary, even their own whips, and of course their own caucus. The chairman of this body is one of those Irishmen born in Great Britain who have played a large part in Irish history for the last fifty years. His name is Austin Harford. Though he himself was born in Liverpool, his parents are both Irish and were ardent supporters of the Irish cause for all their lives. Austin Harford inherited from these parents a lucrative business as cloth merchants, and he is a well-to-do man. But though he is energetic and hard-working in business, a large part of his time is devoted to the Irish movement. He has gradually grown to the position of the Irish leader in Liverpool. A man short in stature, but with a well-knit robust frame, capable of any amount of work, incapable of fatigue, just a bundle of devouring energy and fiery temperament, he works like a slave for the country of his fathers.

Some years ago he entered municipal politics, and before long he rushed to the front; and became the vice-chairman of the most important committee of the municipality—the Housing Committee. Here, by a happy coincidence, he found another Irishman in the chair. Kyffin Taylor belongs to the very antithesis in birth creed and politics from Austin Harford. Kyffin Taylor is the son of Archdeacon Taylor, an Irishman by birth, with the strong and almost ultra-Protestant convictions of the Irish Churchman; a vehement enemy of Ritualism and any forms of compromise—as he regarded them—with Rome, and for many years in the pulpit and the press a stern critic of these tendencies in his own Church. Mr. Kiffin Taylor inherited these ultra-Protestant views, but in his case they were mingled with such a strong humanitarian tendency and with such breadth and generosity of view that though he did his share as an ulta-Protestant, he ultimately devoted most of his work and attention to the relief of the poor and the disinherited of Liverpool.

The Housing Committee.

In the chairmanship of the Housing Committee of the Liverpool Municipality, he found a splendid section of the work under his hand and under his impulse and guidance. For the slumming problem was at its worst in some parts of Liverpool, and especially in that portion of it which forms my constituency. Liverpool played in the early Victorian days an even greater part in the life of Ireland than to-day. It was the first port to which the Irish packets brought the visitor from Ireland; it was the starting point from which the stage coach started on the road to London in the days before there were yet railroads. You are still pointed out in my division the street along the rough pavement of which Daniel O'Connell used to pass when he was proceeding from Liverpool to plead the cause of Ireland in the Parliament House at Westminster. When the famine came and the children of Ireland had to rush to the first refuge they could find from hunger at home, from plague that followed hunger, they came in thousands, in tens of thousands, to Liverpool, because it was the first, the shortest, the cheapest, the easiest refuge from the fell sergeant Death that then possessed Ireland. Those who had ten pounds went to America, or Australia; those who had only ten shillings came to Liverpool. Penniless, hungry, with mind untrained, with hands untrained, they took up the hardest and the unhealthiest and the worst paid work; and they could find a refuge only in the slums; and this is largely how Scotland Division—as it is called—came into being and why today an overwhelming Irish population is able to return me—the one Irish Nationalist who sits for a British constituency.

The conditions in these slums were for two generations appalling; a fearful mortality, especially among the children; defective sanitary conditions; houses back to back. This was the problem that appealed to the generous heart of Kyffin Taylor; and soon after Austin Harford became a member of the committee, Kyffin Taylor realized his energy, abilities and public spirit, and for years the two men have acted in perfect accord, and since the war took away Kyffin Taylor from civil life Mr. Hardford has had to take up most of the work himself. The results have been extraordinary — almost incredible. Whole streets of insanitary dwellings have been swept out of existence; and their places have been taken by houses brought up to the last word of sanitary science. The mortality has gone down by leaps and bounds, and so well known philanthropic men, apart from the generous spirit of the city and its use of its enormous wealth in the good work, have left money to this new crusade. The fame of the reconstruction of the housing of Liverpool has gone abroad; and before the war deputations from the house planning bodies of the continent—including those of Germany — have made solemn and official visits to Liverpool to see the wonder and to gather its lessons.

O'Connor in Liverpool.

This is the constituency which I represent in Parliament; it is to these people that I paid one of the three or four visits I make to Liverpool every year. As I have said, I had some misgivings, though not very serious ones, as to the state of temper in which I would find my friends, though their generous support of me for twenty-seven years gave me no reason to doubt that they would be with me in the trying times as well as through our long and happy associations: but the reality exceeded by most sanguine hopes. The Royal Liverpool Regiment has had an Irish battalion for two generations; and during this war it has found innumerable recruits, not only in Liverpool but throughout Lancashire. Lancashire indeed has given proportionately more Irish soldiers to the army than any other community in the country, with the possible exception of the Irishmen in and about Glasgow, another great Irish centre. The men and women I was addressing had given their sons to the war; many of them had lost them. There was a great ceremony at the pro-Cathedral for the souls of the dead soldiers of the Irish battalion. It is significant of the change of the best of the English spirit towards Ireland that the Lord Mayor—himself a stout Protestant and representative of the most Protestant, not to say the most Orange city in England—attended in his robes of office; and he was accompanied by members of the municipality—including some Orange Tories, even a Jewish member. They listened with that strange tranquility of Englishmen under criticism, which is always a marvel to those who don't know them, to very very candid criticism of their religion; and to quite a lively survey of English Protestantism under the inspiration of Germany—"from Luther to the Kaiser"—as Father Bernard Vaughan succinctly put it in a speech the next day to an equally mixed audience of Protestant and Catholic, English and Irish.

But if I want to recount the thing which impressed me most as to the real feelings of the Irish in Liverpool — I must mention my visit to the schools and the college of St. Francis Xavier, the great Jesuit institution to which so many boys and girls of Irish parentage owe their education. "How many of you have relatives in the army?" asked Father Parry, the Rector, "a father, an uncle or a brother." Three-fourths of them held up their hands. "How many of you have lost a relative in the war?" A third of them held up their hands. "Do any of you want Germany to win?" "No, no, no." The denial was rendered the more striking, the more pathetic, because it came in the treble tones of childhood.

Such, then, is that Ireland which dwells in Liverpool; it is a reflection of all the other Irelands that are to be found in Glasgow, in Manchester, in London, in Dundee, in Cardiff, in Newcastle-on-Tyne, in every centre where the Irish exile has found a home. What German gold may have succeeded in doing elsewhere—what revolutionary insanity may have affected in people elsewhere—what the brutal and cruel methods of suppression adopted after the Rebellion may have succeeded in diverting Irish minds from the larger issues of this tremendous conflict — I can say with perfect accuracy that the Irish in Great Britain remain steadfast to the position which they adopted unanimously at the beginning of the war. They are like Lloyd George —they want a fight to the finish and the triumph of those principles of the independence of small nations, the principle of Nationality of freedom and of democracy which they are fought for through so many centuries in their own country, which they will fight for in other countries as well, until a free Europe re-shaped on national lines justify by universal acclaim the wisdom and the justice of the Gospel that once found Ireland and England as perhaps its only ex-

Appeals To Employers, etc.

ed with impressive force, I offer no apology in asking young men to put on the uniform if they are eligible, or business men to carry this appeal into their business. Let them make their business tell for this cause. This is not my war. When I make this appeal to the citizens of Peterborough I hope to hear you are going to stand by king and country, that there is going to be an improvement all along the line, that you are going to stand by the boys overseas.

To the Business Men.

I appeal to the business men of Peterborough. I know that when orders are piling up for your goods, when every wheel is turning, when you could employ men, it is a serious question. But we want to keep your business going. Within the next two to six months when more men will have returned, it will be your duty to make room for them on your staffs. Give the returned soldier the best you've got.

Major Campbell related an experience of his at Chesterville where an employer after hearing him, gave notice to a physically fit young man that he would be replaced on Nov. 1st by a young woman in order that he would be free to enlist. That employer's son was in France and he concluded that his clerk was no better than his son. The young man recently enlisted.

"When the business men will come out and tell the young men that their places are to be filled by young women then the young men will enlist."

And Canada's young women are prepared and ready to fill such vacancies, said Major Campbell in a plea that they be given a fair opportunity to make good. He told of a Kingston manufacturer who said recently, "I need one hundred men and I need them right away." I said, Major Campbell continued, that I had one hundred women who would do their work.

"Oh," the manufacturer replied, "Canadian women are not rugged and handy enough for this work."

"Don't dare insult them," was the Major's response, "give them a chance and see if they're rugged or not."

Revise Payroll.

Referring to his business training and comprehension of his appeal, Major Campbell said to the business men, "In all seriousness I ask you to revise your payrolls forthwith and see how many there are in your employ whom you can replace with women. I was told the young men would not be here to-night, but I appeal to you employers, and I want the women register to see how many are prepared to take the place of men whoare fit to go overseas. I can't do it, but you can.

I ask the young men, speaking in behalf of their king and country and appealing in the name of the 250,000 who are overseas and the 165,000 who are on the way, can't you see your way to join the 207th Battalion that Peterborough may be as proud of you and of it as you deserve.

There was faith and hope and a world of patience in Major Campbell's plea, and the materials provided him as chief recruiting officer of the 3rd division demand these virtues more than ever in the third year of the war.

"The Peterborough battalion is not growing as rapidly as we would like to see it grow. You won't allow the dishonour of having your battalion not grow as it should?"

Needs of No 3 Division.

Speaking of the responsibility of his work, Major Campbell stated that No. 3 Division, in which we are located, with a population of about 30,000 men, was asked to raise 42,000 men. We have raised, he said, 30,000, and are asked to make up the remaining 8,400 before the first of May next year.

Capt. Kenney.

Whether by design or fortuity, the evening's addresses followed a rather logical sequence. Capt. Kenney of the divisional recruiting staff, sketched the reasons of our participation in this war after Major Frost had told of the work of the boys of the first expeditionary forces, and Major Campbell followed with his appeal for supports to the men who have already gone from Canada. Capt. Kenney's address was a clear and concise review heightened here and there with adequate colouring.

After distinguishing between the occasion and causes of war as illustrated by the American revolution, the French revolution and others, Capt. Kenney stated that while this war was occasioned by the assassination in Serajevo, the real causes were less evident, but more deeply and broadly rooted. Austria feared the growth of the Balkan states, German sought more territory. In ten years, wrote Bernhardi, Germany will have a population of eighty millions and she must have more territory at any cost. Capt. Kenney built his address on these facts and eventually approached the perplexing question of more recruits. Canadian boys, he said, were not coward. They had demonstrated that fact in Flanders and in France, but more men were needed now and there arose the question of why enlistments were not maintained. Home influences were opposed in far too many cases to the country's need of men. Some parents said they did not want their boys to associate with those who were soldiers, an attitude that Capt. Kenney sternly denounced. The flower of Canada was in arms. Toronto Univeristy ha s3,000 of her boys with the forces and McGill 2,000, and the battalions are full of preachers, teachers, lawyers, clerks and mechanics. The "beat girl" keeps many a fellow at home, but this kind of man Capt. Kenney denounced as unworthy of the affections of any true Canadian girl.

Major Frost dwelt upon this latter condition remarking that the young man who will not consider his duty to his country and his home, is not worthy of the affections, the time and the place in a young girl's life.

Major Campbell thanked the members of the Patroitic League for preparing for the meeting and all those who in any way had assisted Col. Johnston in arranging his first success.

GRAIN CAR DEMOLISHED IN MINOR MISHAP TO C.P.R. TRAIN

One grain car was crumpled up, and another considerably damaged on the C.P.R. near Mervin's, west of the city, last night, when the air brakes of an east-bound freight were automatically thrown on by the snapping of the rubber air coupler or bag between two of the cars. The result was the same as if the emergency break were applied. The train came to a sudden stop, but its momentum had to be expended somewhere and one of the first box cars, loaded with grain, was broken up, as if by a huge vice. The force was applied at either end and the car simply bulged out at the middle, depositing the grain on either side of the track.

The C. P. R. has been extremely busy hauling these grain trains east, and the effect of the sudden application of the brakes may be imagined. One of the cars will likely be repaired, but the other was reduced to kindling by the impact, and was burned last night. The Havelock auxiliary crew quickly cleared the road

CHICAGO, Oct. 23. — December wheat sold at $1.75 a bushel and May wheat one eighth of a cent under that figure to-day, advancing four cents amid scenes of excited buying in the wheat pit. Speculators scrambled to buy in the belief that the crop shortage situation is becoming more acute.

SERGT. HINCHEY'S BAND AT RECRUITING MEETING

The 155th Battalion band received a warm welcome at the recruiting meeting last night and they responded with a short programme that fully displayed the band's range, its fine tonal qualities, its precision of execution and attack, its shading and particularly the clarity of its piano work. Conductor Hinchey need have no apologies for the work of his organization in Peterborough, whose own 33rd was regarded as an exceptionally good military band. The Post and Peasant overture drew a round of well merited applause. The American Patrol, several marches, a fine selection of old songs and other numbers comprised the programme.

Germans Imprison English Dentist

LONDON, Oct. 23.—Reuter's Amsterdam correspondent says it is reported on good authority that Dr. Bull, a wealthy English dentist, has been sentenced in Belgium to imprisonment for six years on the charge of treason.

A London despatch last week said 50 persons, one of them Dr. Bull, were to be court-martialed at Brussels. Dr. Bull was charged with having provided funds for Miss Edith Cavell, the English nurse who was put to death by the German authorities at Brussels, to assist in the escape of Belgian soldiers.

Voice of the People

Editor of the Examiner

Dear Editor,—No doubt you are aware that there are hundreds of strong robust men at the age of from 45 to 60 walking our streets to-day idle. These are salling gentlemen and men of means and are not obliged to work for a living in order to make both ends meet. In other words to use the language of the street these men are on "easy street".

The mills, factories, shops, etc., in this town that are engaged in the manufacture of goods for export to Great Britain in aid of the allies are short of men. There are also a large number of young men working in those industries that are eligible for overseas and are willing to go to the front but by so doing would jeopardize these industries that are engaged in the manufacture of war supplies.

To my mind there is a solution to this problem, that is by those "easy street" gentlemen falling in line and taking off their coats and filling the positions of the young men that want to go to the front. This would not be very much after all when we consider that the Empire is in peril and is knocking at our very doors for assistance, if the lily white hands are soiled or even become knotty or horney during this fearfull carnage.

If the recruiting committees would take this matter up I have every reason to believe that it would be worth their while looking into.

The CRESSMAN Company Limited

With The Men Of The 93rd In France

Pte. G. L. Petty of Peterboro' Describes the Trip From the Training Camp to the Front Line—Long Marches and Bully Beef and Biscuits to Eat.

IN A SHELLED TOWN

Pte G. L. Petty who went overseas as a member of the Bugle Band of the 93rd Battalion and is now in France, having gone in a draft sends some interesting news in a letter received by his mother, Mrs. Wm. Petty 274 John street.

Pte Petty writes in part as follows:

Somewhere in France
Oct. 2, 1916

Dear Mother and Father.—Just a few lines to let you know I have not forgotten you as I know this letter will be late in getting to you. Well, I am still alive and in the best of health.

We have made another move and we had some move too. We are up to the line now but haven't been in the trenches yet, but I guess I will be there before long.

We finished our training at the other camp on Thursday the 28th and left there on Friday the 30th, travelling for two days or part of two days. Then we marched about two miles to a rest camp, where we got some more rations, and they are rations, bully beef and hard biscuits. We then had a rest for a few hours and then started out again and marched until it got dark. Then we stopped beside the road and lay there until morning. It was some night. About mid-night we had to get up and put a fire on and get some hot supper made. We had a good supply, too. We put some water in our mess tins and put a can of bully beef and biscuits in it, put it on the fire and it was just like a stew. I forget to say what we made our fire out of, so this is what it was. The farmers over here stack all their grain, so we went to a stack and took two or three sheaves and they sure made some fire. Then it was too cold to lie out with nothing but our great coats, so we went to the stacks and pulled out some sheaves and got under them and it made a swell bed. We stayed with it until morning and then started out again and marched about twelve miles to this place where we are now. Say this is a swell place. It is a town that has been shelled and it is pretty near a complete ruin. We are billeted in a house and it has been shelled, too. The panes are all out of the windows and we had to put papers over them. There are about seventy of us in this one place. We are using our feather beds on the floor. The sky is red with the shells, just a few miles away. Well, dear parents, you need not worry about me as I am O.K. enjoying myself, just aching to get a chance at those gray jackets.

I got a big surprise at the other camp, just before we came away. I was coming in one night from the training camp, and who should I see but Jack Heron (Signaller Heron of Peterborough) and I put in two great days with him. We had some time talking over old times. He came up to the line the night before I came. He has been wounded and in the hospital for some time.

A HELPFUL SERMON BY REV. W. H. WHITE

Rector of St. Luke's Based His Remarks Upon Two Texts At the Evening Service Yesterday—"Put on the Whole Armour of God."

In his sermon at St. Luke's church yesterday the Rev. W. H. White based his sermon on two texts as follows: Ephesians 6:11, which reads—"Put on the whole armour of God, that ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil", and Titus 2:12—"Teaching us that denying ungodliness and wordly lusts, we should live soberly, righteously and godly, in the present world".

In opening Rev. Mr. White referred to the device or design of a man, standing upon a globe, which stands at the entrance of one of the world's most famous museums. This figure, with its feet planted on the earth, its arms outstretched, and looking unto Heaven, represented very nicely the triple relationship of man, his duty to the world, his fellowmen, and to God. The feet, so firmly planted on the Globe represented our relationship to the earth; the arms outstretched signified man's duty to his fellow men; and the eager cast of the eye towards Heaven typified men's spiritual duty—to know God, and to love and worship Him.

It should be the duty of every man to lead a godly, righteous and sober life to the glory of God and of God's holy name. The development of our destiny in our three great departments of life was no mere matter of course, nor even an easy accomplishment. So Paul refers to the Christian as a soldier in armour, prepared to resist a wily, evil enemy—the devil.

The speaker urged that all needed to be armed against the wiles and subtleties of the Devil, and expressed his belief in the existence of a very real, personal Satan. In fact in His accounts of His own temptations, Christ himself leaves testimony of the actual existence of Satan. Of course, the angel of darkness would not visit to tempt men in the usual awful form ascribed to him, but would appear as had unto Christ, in a natural alluring form, with natural alluring suggestions, the evil element of which he would veil in his diabolically cunning manner.

Reverting to the triple relationship of man while on the earth, the speaker dealt first with his relation to the earth. Man, after all, was an animal. But even as an animal, man had no bodily cravings, that were not in themselves good. It was only when the Devil tempted successfully that there bodily desires become evil by abuse.

But if man were an animal he was still more a social animal, and it was impossible for a man to be really happy, or to develop to the highest good without association with his fellows. Even as the perfect man we should increase in favour with man as well as in favour with God. One should pass through this life clinging to God with his right hand, and to man with his left. If we would go trough life like that all was well and good; but it behoored us to see to it that we did not let go with the right hand and cling too tightly with the left; that we did not bow too greatly to the opinion of men at the sacrifice of our relationship with God.

Above all, man was a religious being. Science had proved very definitely that every man must have some religion. Whether that religion was good or bad was a different matter, but the fact was that all people have some religious belief.

We must choose then, the perfect freedom of Christ or the absolute slavery of the Devil. Mr. White pointed out with considerable eloquence that the only sure way to avoid the slavery of the Devil was to choose the service of Christ—to place Him in the citadel of our hearts and enthrone Him as King of our lives.

AN ELOQUENT PLEA FOR INTROSPECTION

Rev. Robt. Pogue's Appeal to His Congregation to Look Inward Upon Their Own Lives Second of a Series of Sermons on the General Doctrine of Higher Living

Rev. Robt. Pogue in the second of a series of sermons, made an eloquent and earnest plea for introspection, at St. Paul's Church yesterday morning. "The Confession and Abandonment of All Known Sin," was the subject of his sermon, and in relation to it his appeal to every member of the congregation to look inward upon their own lives, was a stirring and helpful one. The series of sermons opened at the morning service of a week ago yesterday morning, in which the pastor dealt with certain religious movements, more particularly that of Keswick in the old land, and of Northfield in America, and will comprise a number of discourses on the... "General Doctrine of Higher Living."

Yesterday morning, in the second sermon, Mr. Pogue dealt with "The Confession and Abandonment of All Known Sin." The confession of known sin, he offered, indicates an antecedent process, for to confess sin, one must first discover it. There was a certain class of people who went their way complacently day by day, calling their sins weaknesses, and putting away their sinful acts as mere faults — attempting even to excuse and defend them.

The first definite step in the confession and abandonment of known sin, was to examine one's self in the light, and by the Word of the Will of God. In this the pastor pleaded for most uncompromising thoroughness — for one to study and search out the very worst in one's self and then confess to God. "First of all," said the pastor, "begin with your secret life. What kind of a life do you live in that place into which even your dearest friend does not penetrate—which only the eye of God can penetrate." In this search one would likely discover that the thoughts of that inner life were not all pure and kindly and strong. One would find that they had doubted God's love, questioned His Providence, and disbelieved his wisdom. Also in the secret life of thought, plots of jealousy and envy against one's fellow beings had been entertained. This secret life was unknown even to a man's dearest friends—was strange to his wife and the members of his family. "In our secret lives we must be right with God. He holds us responsible for right thoughts and pure desires." But there was also the promise that if these sad discoveries were made, God would give a new heart, with purity of thought and loftiness of desire.

Secondly, we must search ourselves for the habits of our lives, and too often it is found that they are not all that they should be—that our passions and desires have not been controlled. Time was too limited to go into the details of the various departments of our lives, but he would deal with such commonplace things as eating and drinking. "I am aware," asserted Mr. Pogue, "That I am dealing with things that are trivial to a great many of you, and that you have never considered as related to your religious lives. But thousands of church members to-day, will seat themselves at tables which are groaning under the weight of useless luxuries, when thousands are suffering in Belgium for the want of the bare necessities, and millions and millions are dying without the bread of life."

The speaker referred to the habit of some men spending anywhere from $100.00 to $500.000 a year on tobacco and give $5.00 or less for the furtherance of God's plans. Women spent yearly large sums on articles of personal adornment and expensive knick-knacks, and people of both sexes were spending a large part of their whole income in the gratification of personal whims. "You cannot do that without sin — without grievous sin," said the pastor. Many people had never considered these matters as being related to their religious lives — and that was just the trouble. When God searches our lives, we consider our sins, certain things which we had never before even associated at all in their thoughts, with religion. "We want all the power God can give us—and spiritual power is only gained when we grapple with appetite.

The third department of our existence to be looked into was the Home Life of the Individual—How did they conduct themselves there? Were the members of your home in love with your Christianity? What about your temper in your home—is it always sweet? And your servants—how do you treat them? What about the scolding, nagging and bitterness to the help of which so many are guilty? Can a maid coming into your home from a non-Christian home notice the difference in the atmosphere and spirit of the place? And you business men—how do you treat your help? Are you enslaved by your temper.

The young people present should ask themselves the question: "If everyone in our home were just like me, what kind of a home would it be?"

"I know I am dealing now with seemingly little things. But after all there are few big events in life. Life is made up of little things, and if we are not to be Christians in the little things, I do not see that it counts much, or even worth while, to be Christians in the big things of life.

"I might refer to other habits of life," continued Mr. Pogue.

"Your habits of reading, for example. Do you read for edification or amusement? Are the books you read absolutely pure? And in regard to your social life, are your companions helpful to your spiritual life? What are the character of your amusements? How do you spend your spare time? As you the slave of the love of money, or covetousness?"

Concluding the speaker emphasized the fact that all this introspection might be honestly conducted by a man, and yet lead to one of the greatest mistakes in his life. When he discovered his weaknesses he might depend on his own strength to uproot them and throw them from him.

"You must not seek to do, in your own strength, what divine Grace alone can accomplish."

Mr. Arthur Milton, of the choir, rendered a beautiful setting of "Jesus Lover of My Soul," and the choir's offering of "Oh How Amiable Are Thy Dwellings" was greatly appreciated.

Decline of Spiritual Life in the Church

Editor of the Examiner:

Our last article concluded with the death and burial of Moses, during the time of Moses' leadership the people had followed the idols and customs of the nations that God had sent them to destroy. A commentator says that during the 40 years of the wandering of the children of Israel in the wilderness, there is reason to fear that very little vital and practical religion existed in the multitudes that came out of Egypt. Their constant rebellion against the Lord their God seems to prove that there was little of the sanctifying influence of the Holy Spirit among them as a body. There was very little of real piety in their various submissions. There was the sorrow of the world that worketh death—this was the low spiritual state of God's chosen people 1401 years before the birth of Christ. Then we have the life of Joshua who died at the age of 110 years and Israel served the Lord all the days of Joshua and of all the elders that outlived Joshua; a new and better state of things began to appear. Passing on to the reign of King David the Shepherd King, a space of 385 years lapses. David was chosen by Judah for their King and seven years later the children of Israel, the 10 tribes appointed him King, then he set himself to bring the ark of the Lord to the House of God at Jerusalem and he desired to honour God by building a temple to his name to worship there, but the Lord sent Nathan the prophet with a message saying thou shalt say unto my servant David, thus saith the Lord of hosts, I took thee from the sheep-cote, from following the sheep, to be ruler over my people, over Israel. So God established his Kingdom and when he went out to battle the Lord gave him victory and delivered all his enemies into his hands. He relied upon God more than on the great army under his command; he went into no undertaking without first asking the Lord: shall I go up against them. The Sacred writer says that the Lord preserved him wherever he went and the people put away their idols and turned to serve the Lord and for a time King and people continued to serve God, but when we think all is peace and quiet, then sudden destruction may come upon us, let him that thinketh, he standeth take heed, lest he fall. David began to neglect his business when he should have been abroad with his army fighting the Lord's battles, he devolved the care upon others, and he himself tarried still at Jerusalem, when we are out of the way of our duty, we are in temptation—love of ease and the indulgence of a slothful temper; idleness gives great advantage to the tempter. A wandering eye, either he had not like Job, made a covenant with his eye, or, at this time he had forgotten it. See how the way of sin is down hill; when men begin to do evil, they cannot soon stop themselves, the beginning of lust, as of strife, is like the letting forth of water, it is therefore wisdom not to meddle with it. David was a King whom God had entrusted with the sword of justice, and the execution of the law upon adulterers and others, the punishment whereof was death, to be guilty of such a crime himself was to make himself a pattern, when he should have been a terror to evildoers. What face could he have to punish others for the crime of which he was guilty himself? We need to pray, lead us not into temptation, and watch that we do not enter into it. David endeavored to conceal his sin and one crime led to another and finally ended in the death of Uriah the brave and faithful soldier. The awful crime was aggravated by the murder of other soldiers in the battle where Uriah was slain. David was considered a man after God's own heart, but he fell from grace under temptation. We ask, can a real believer ever tread this path and be a Christian? Though grace be not lost in such an awful case, the assurance and consolations of it must be suspended all his life. Spirituality and comfort in religion we may be sure was lost, but with the Lord there is mercy and plenteous redemption and David confessed and acknowledged and repented of his sin and God forgave him, but had to suffer the punishment of his sins as long as he lived, cause and effect follow each other and the bird with broken pinion never soars so high again. From the reign of King David to the birth of Christ, a period of about 1000 years during which time the number of good and bad Kings were nearly equal, but we would observe that the reign of the good Kings were long whereas the reign of the bad Kings were short. The nation had gone up and down in spiritual life after revival under the good Kings; they would relapse again into idolatery and gross sins—the state of the world was gross darkness when Jesus was born. The nation had forsaken God and God had left them to themselves, the Romans had besieged and taken their city and over 1,000,000 had perished in the seige, the spiritual condition of church and state were at low ebb and God's own chosen people were under the rule of a foreign power, but at the darkest hour light begins to dawn and the son of righteousness appears with healing in his wings, and the glory of the Lord shall be revealed and all flesh shall see it together for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it.

ROUMANIA'S GREATEST SEAPORT TAKEN

Berlin Announces Capture of Constanza By Mackenzen's Army Large Quantities of Munitions Taken and Fall of Port Prevents Transportation of Reinforcements via the Black Sea.

Special to The Examiner:

BERLIN, October 23.—Constanza, Roumania's greatest seaport, has fallen before Field Marshall Mackenzen's army, it was officially announced this afternoon. The capture of this city is the greatest single achievement for the Central Powers since Roumania entered the war eight weeks ago.

The victory is hailed by German military men as of more importance than all the gains made by the Allies since the Somme offensive began. Since Roumania entered the war Russian transports have been bringing Slav troops, munitions and her war supplies to the aid of the Roumanians largely through the port of Constanza whose capture by the Central Powers effectually puts an end to the transportation of reinforcements via the Black Sea.

It is believed here that enormous quantities of supplies were captured at Constanza, the rapidity of Mackenzen's advance making it appear likely that the Roumanians were unable to withdraw large quantities of supplies which recently reached the seaport. In Transylvania, where the attempted Roumanian counter offensive was quickly halted by the Austro-Germans, the situation is unchanged.

In Macedonia the arrival of German reinforcements in the bend of the River Colna has put the Serbians on the defensive after several days of obstinate fighting.

The population of Constanza is about 28,000. It has fine harbour facilities. The advance was made during a torrential rain and over sodden ground. While the extreme right wing was occupying Constanza other detachments fought their way across the Constanza-Cernavoda Railway line east of the town of Marfatlar, 13 miles west of Constanza.

Mr. A. MacNab Has Resigned Position

Mr. Alpine MacNab, G.T.R. station agent in Peterborough for a number of years, has sent in his resignation to the company to take effect on November 1st. This was the report around G.T.R. headquarters this morning, and it was generally regarded as a fact. Mr. MacNab is in Toronto to-day. If this means his removal from Peterborough he is going to be greatly missed in more than the business circle of the city in which he has been highly esteemed. His interest in the G.T.R. has greatly exceeded the efforts and the imagination of the average station [illegible]

FOWLER'S PEBLO GLASSES

NO SCREWS TO LOOSEN

THE old style Eyeglass Mount depended on screws to hold the lenses in place, and these were continually coming loose, causing annoyance and possibly a broken lens if the screw falls out.

With DR. FOWLER'S SCREWLESS MOUNTS, this trouble is done away with. The mount and lens are fused firmly together, and they are not only safe but extremely neat in appearance.

Curlers Suggest A Two-Club Idea

Some of last year's curlers are advocating a two club organization this winter. They believe that the spirit of the rink will not be weakened by a division, which is proposed only for the series of games, but that there will be keener rivalry and competition than the scheduled games have provided. The subject will likely be broached to the rink company, which is the court of last resort, the upper house, in curling affairs.

FOUR PERSONS KILLED

Mr. and Mrs. Cahoun, Mr. and Mrs. Marr, victims of Crossing Accident.

SIMCOE, Oct. 23.—Four persons met their death at Delhi Saturday, just before noon, when the No. 3 Wabash Express, westbound, struck an auto at the Simcoe road crossing, just east of the town.

The dead are Mr and Mrs. Joseph Marr and Mr. and Mrs. E. B. Cahoon, all of Malahide Township. Mrs. Marr died an hour after the accident in the home of Mr. Richard Oakes, near the scene. The others were killed instantly. They had taken dinner just out of town at the farm house of L. C. McConnell, two or three days ago, and it is conjectured that they were on a cross-country trip and returning.

The crossing is not a dangerous one but the curtain was drawn at the time, and as No. 3 does not stop at Delhi she was running at a fair rate The car was demolished.

Dr. Tisdale of Delhi will have an inquest. The dead were taken to Mr. McPherson's undertaking rooms, The caskets will be forwarded to Aylmer for interment.

Austrian Premier Shot By Editor While Dining In Hotel At Vienna

Assailant, Who Claimed Stuergkh's Political Views Responsible For His Action, Was Known as "The Liebknecht of Austria"—Plot Against Life of Premier Tisza of Hungary is Also Unearthed—Act of Public Vengeance, Says British Press Comment on Shooting.

DENOUNCED AS A TRAITOR

LONDON, October 24.—Count Karl Stuergkh, the Austrian premier, was shot and killed Saturday while at dinner, by the editor of a Vienna newspaper named Alder.

The papers all print long editorials on the assassination of Premier Stuergkh. The general opinion expressed is that the removal of Stuergkh is the work of men who wish to free the Austrian government from a clique of politicians who are largely controlled by the Hungarian Premier Tisza in the interests of the Magyars and Germany. On this theory the assassination is held to represent the Austrian movement to escape from the domination of Berlin.

PUBLIC VENGEANCE.

The Daily News says: "The murder is the natural outcome of the policy of sitting on the safety valve, of which Stuergkh was the embodiment. Where all the means of effective public opposition to a government is denied, the right of public vengeance will generally reassert itself in some form or other."

"NOTEWORTHY INCIDENT."

The Times says: "The assassination of Stuergkh is by far the most noteworthy incident in his career. Though the crime may be but a minor explosion, it appears to have made some noise in Berlin. We cannot presume to foretell its further reverberations."

Continuing, the Times says that the Premier rose to power through an alliance with the great Austrian political boss named Sieghart, who has played a leading part in the subterranean policies of Austria for a decade.

ELECTED BY SECRET PRESS.

"Sieghart is the son of a provincial rabbi," says the Times, "who started his career as an employee of the Austrian press bureau. By dint of hard work and intrigue he rose to be head of the press bureau. In this position he controlled the secret press funds, giving considerable sums to an obscure weekly edited by his friend Stuergkh.

"In 1904, when Sieghart perceived that Premier von Korber was losing ground, he turned the official press against him and prepared the event of his successor.

TURNED AGAINST HIM.

"This manoeuvre Sieghart repeated with four successive premiers until he became the most influential personage in Austrian politics. In 1910, Sieghart left the press bureau for a rich post as head of the land credit bank whence he was influential in hoisting Stuergkh to the premiership. Information reached London last week that Sieghart was using his influence to destroy Stuergkh as he had destroyed so many other premiers. He expected to accomplish the downfall of Stuergkh through the agitation for the convocation of Parliament."

MENACE OF REVOLUTION.

The Morning Post sees in the event a protest against absolutism which may be followed by a reign of terror. Expressing similar thoughts, the Chronicle says: "Among the Austrian masses the suffering brought on by the war has bred desperation and, however its outbreaks may be repressed while the war lasts, there must be the menace of revolution as soon as it is over to which the Austrian government class cannot be indifferent."

PLOT AGAINST TISZA.

The assassination of Count Stuergkh lends new interest to the details of a plot to assassinate Count Tisza, the Hungarian Premier, which reached London to-day by mail from Budapest. Two young men who were arrested in connection with this plot were named Zoltanbiro and Zaborsky. Each of them is 19 years old.

They had carefully made their plans, purchased revolvers, prepared measures for their escape from the country afterwards and had communicated with several persons from whom they expected assistance.

DENOUNCED AS TRAITOR.

At their trial one of the young men pleaded not guilty, but made a defiant political speech, in which he denounced Count Tisza as a traitor against the nation and declared he would continue to plot against the Premier's life as soon as he was free. Owing to their comparative youth, Zoltanbiro and Zaborsky were sentenced to only five months' imprisonment, with the provision that both should join the colours at the expiration of their sentence.

CANNOT INFLENCE WAR.

VIENNA, October 21.—Midnight, via London, Oct. 23.—Government circles here regard the killing of Premier Stuergkh as an act of a political crank which can in no wise influence the political situation or the course of the war. This statement was made to the correspondent of the Associated Press in high responsible quarters.

STANDS ALONE.

It is pointed out that the time which has elapsed since the murder has shown that Alder, the assassin, stands alone. His act is disavowed by the Socialist party and press and condemned by his father, Victor Alder, Socialist member of the Lower Chamber of the Reichsrath. Alder stated to the police that he shot Stuergkh because the Premier opposed the convening of Parliament. It is stated officially that Stuergkh had at no time done this and that he could not do it because the convening of Parliament was a matter in the hands of the political parties.

"IRRESPONSIBLE CRIMINAL."

The Austro-Hungarian press brands Alder as an irresponsible criminal and without exception deplores the fact that the act of a crazy man should disturb the peace of the people. The city is quiet. The public, while naturally greatly interested, regards the murder as a purely private crime.

The assassination was purely political and was induced by his refusal to convent Parliament, according to the admission of Dr. Friedlrich Alder his assailant, shortly after his agrest.

Dr. Alder, is an eccentric and super-radical socialist, sometimes known as "The Liebknecht of Austria." He is editor of Der Kampf. At first he declined to reveal his motives, but after being locked up he broke down and declared the Premier's policies had led him to the deed.

Two Others Shot.

Dr. Alder's arrest, was not accomplished without the wounding of two men who esped at him after he had fired on Count Stuergkh. He discharged the two remaining chambers of his revolver at these men before Austrian and German officers with drawn sabres, overpowered him. The wounded men, who were injured slightly are Baron Aehrenthal, brother of the late foreign minister, and the head waiter of the hotel Meinal Und Schaden, in which the shooting occurred.

Count Stuergkh arrived at the hotel at 1.30 o'clock. With him at luncheon were Baron Aehrenthal, Count Toggenburg, governor of the Tyrol, Herr Jacobson, a prominent Vienna musician, and an actor from the court theatre. At 2 o'clock a man unknown to the Premier arrived and took a seat three table away. He ate luncheon and paid for the meal, but lingered at the table. Shortly after 3 o'clock he arose, advanced rapidly toward the Premier and fired three shots. The first missed. The next two struck the Premier in the head. Without a word Count Stuergkh fell back lifeless in his chair.

Baron Aehrenthal sprang toward Alder. The head waiter ran up from behind the assassin and grasped the hand that held the revolver. Alder wrested his arm free and fired two shots. Baron Aehrenthal was wounded in the foot. The waiter received only a superfical wound.

Gave Up Struggle.

Seeing that the struggle was hopeless Dr. Alder surrendered to the officers who crowded upon him and gave up his revolver. Apparently he was the calmest man in the room. He gave his name without hesitation and added:

Roumanian Defeat Partly Due To The Lack of Artillery

The Russians Brought Reinforcements in Men But Were Unable to Bring Adequate Artillery Equipment—Two Powerful Armies Are Attacking the Roumanians

AN EASY VICTORY

Examiner Special

BERLIN, [illegible] Falkenhayn's easy victory at Dobrudja was due partly to the Russo-Roumanians lack of artillery, it is understood here. When Falkenhan began sweeping the Roumanians out of Transylvania, the Roumanians hastily shifted guns from the Dobrudja to the Transylvanian passed to check the invasion of their western borders. The Russians brought reinforcements in men to Dubrudja, but were unable to bring adequate artillery equipment, and the enemy batteries were unable to offer active opposition to the Teutonic advance.

BERLIN, Oct. 24. —Two powerful armies attacking from the east and west, threaten to crush Roumania in a mighty vice and put her out of the war before the winter sets in. On the Roumanian's western front, Field Marshall Falkenhayn has resumed the offensive and is carrying the battle to the Roumanians at several different places on Roumanian soil.

LONDON, Oct. 24.—The feeling here is that the loss of Dobrudja is serious, but not vital to the Roumanians.

BUCHAREST, Oct. 24.—In the Trotus valley, the Austro-German forces are retiring.

Says Russia Holds A Million Prisoners

American Consul General at Moscow Finds the Nation Confident of Victory—The People Prosperous—Asserts Peasants Never Had So Much Money As Now—His Office Aids Interned Civilians.

ALL FACTORIES ON WAR WORK

There will be no new Russian-American commercial treaty signed until after the European war, in the opinion of John Harold Snodgrass, United States Consul General at Moscow, who arrived from Europe on his first leave of absence in three years. According to Mr. Snodgrass, who is stopping at the Waldorf-Astoria, Russia has said as much in so many words. At the present time she is too busy with the war to make treaties.

Mr. Snodgrass has had charge of the business interests of Germany and Austria in Russia and of interned civilian prisoners of those countries. One of the things he brought back testifies to the appreciation in which he is held by the Jewish subjects of Russia for his activities in relief work. It is a handsome gold wrist watch of unusual design, with a gold clasp attachment, and it bears this inscription:

"May you receive your reward on Judgment Day. From the grateful Jews of Russia."

"There are 200,000 Germans and Austrians interned as civil prisoners in Russia," said Mr. Snodgrass, "and of the military prisoners there are anywhere from a million upward. Of the former the vast majority are women and children. For the last year and a half the civil prisoners have been sent out of the big cities and interned in the country along the east of the Volga, in the provincial cities and smaller towns and villages. However, the Slavs who were German subjects—the Szechs or Poles—have been permitted to live in the provincial capitals.

15,000,000 RUBLES DISTRIBUTED.

"During the two years of war our Consulate General, which has a staff of sixty persons, has distributed among the civil prisoners about 15,000,000 rubles. This has been for the most part Government relief, given by Austria and Germany. But quite a good part of it has come from private sources, and I may say that every country in the world has been represented, money coming from China, Japan, and Java, and even from hostile countries. A great sum has come, of course, from the United States.

"The relief work has been done through committees in various provincial capitals, who in their turn have worked through sub-committees in the villages. In the government of Orenburg alone there are 25,000 civil prisoners of war, most of them living in the villages. We sent to that province 280,000 rubles monthly, and the committee in charge distributes through no fewer than 157 sub-committees. We have sent relief by wire as far as 3,000 miles away from Moscow, and even Turgaisky, a nomadic place in Central Asia, has received aid.

"Russia is very prosperous—never before so much so. The peasants have more money than ever before, and in wages they are getting from three to five times as much as before the war. All the factories are turning out munitions, and women employed in them are justifying the experiment of employing them.

"The effects of the prohibition of the sale of vodka are marked. It is undoubtedly one reason for the great prosperity. People have money that would formerly be spent for drink. To some degree peasants are making some sort of alcoholic beverage themselves, but not to a dangerous degree, though occasionally one hears of cases of blindness produced by drinking wood alcohol, and the drinking of varnish and of eau de cologne is heard of once in a while; but the Government tries to keep wood alcohol out of reach.

"We give the Austrian prisoners a monthly allowance of ten rubles for adults and five rubles for children. The German allowance used to be the same, but the Germans found their people required more, and the allowance has been increased to fifteen rubles for adults and eight for children. It is a difficult problem to find proper clothes, food and shelter for them, and to take proper care of the aged, to whom, as is the case with sick persons, we make a special allowance. Fuel is a big problem, for wood is scarce, and has gone up fourfold in price, being now 38 rubles for a sahjen (two-thirds of a cord).

ALL THE FACTORIES ON WAR WORK.

"The Germans and Austrians have sent in thirty train loads of twenty-five cars each of clothing, but that is not enough. This has come through Sweden. The Russians are doing their very best to look after the military prisoners, but transportation facilities are so limited, and raw materials so scarce, and the needs are in such a gigantic scale that their problem is difficult.

"All the factories in Russia are running at top speed, and factories owned by foreigners must turn out munitions as well as those owned by Russians. The plants of the International Harvester Co. and the Singer Sewing Machine Company are putting out a lot of war materials. French experts have come over to assist the Russians. They seem to have plenty of munitions of all kinds, the soldiers are better clothed and fed, and they all seem happy.

"There is, of course, an immense demand for American goods in Russia, but there seems to be no way of filling it. The ports of Vladivostock and Archangel are absolutely closed to private consignments, nothing being delivered there except what is for the Russian government. The Russians appear to be very confident these days. It is significant that never have diamond and fur merchants done such a volume of business as at present. Great preparations are being made for business to come after the war.

Of course, there is going to be a tremendous chance for American trade in Russia. For fifteen years Germany had the bulk of business with Russia, and was even selling vast quantities of American goods under a German trade mark in that country because Germans knew the ropes. After the war we shall have to deal direct.

"You hear lots of talk about prejudice against Americans and the United States in belligerent countries. Let me say that there is less in Russia than in any other European country. As a matter of fact, Russians have a very friendly interest for this country. I have heard no harsh criticism about the attitude of the United States, and they seem to recognize the principle that we know our own business best."

THE SILENT NAVY

The silence of the Navy is a most impressive thing. It has been silent in many seas and on many occasions. The biographer of John Hay, once American Ambassador to England, has now, after many years, broken that silence by relating how the suggestion that the British Fleet was at the disposal of the United States, prevented a European coalition against that nation when the Spanish war was imminent. Again, it was the silent hint conveyed by the position of Sir Edward Chichester's flagship in Manilla Bay that caused the German Admiral to retire. It was in silence, too, that the British Fleet disappeared from view on the 28th June, 1914, and made it unsafe for the German Emperor to despatch his squadrons, then quartered in Norwegian fiords, by way of the Atlantic, to destroy the French fleet in the Mediterranean. But the silence that is almost uncanny is that which broken only once off Jutland, has veiled the Battle Squadrons of Great Britain from the gaze of the world since the war began.

And yet, protected by those great unseen ships, the commerce of the world has gone on; troops from every Dominion and British possession have sailed over thousands of miles; millions of British soldiers have gone to France, Greece, Egypt, East and West Africa, Mesopotamia and China, and the Entente Allies have been supplied with coal, steel, oil, shells and guns, and all the other necessaries of war, as well as everything required for their sustenance. In short the Silent Navy has made possible the resounding blows delivered by the Army wherever the enemy is at bay in his long and attenuated battle lines.

Canada is asked to supply a few men for the new super-dreadnoughts. There ought to be an instant response, for it is no small honour that is done to us by the request.

THE LITTLE FORTUNE

BY ARNOLD FREDERICKS

Their only chance now lay in getting the coin from you after Mr. Morris had delivered it to you. For this reason they hastened to the Hotel Rochambeau, saw you, persuaded you that the letter and coin which Mr. Morris was to deliver to you were both survivors, and awaited results.

"Meanwhile, they evidently got into a quarrel, during which Reinhardt was killed. The presence of the one-franc piece on the floor of the room indicates clearly to me that it was over this that they quarreled. Perhaps Hartmann accused Reinhardt of having made the fatal mistake which resulted in the loss of the coin.

"Reinhardt killed, Hartmann throws off his disguise, assumes the part of George Vernon's brother, and goes to his apartment. His keys, of course, he obtained from the purser's body at the time of his murder. Then he writes to you, offering you a thousand dollars for the franc-piece. Had I not come to the hotel this afternoon, he would have obtained it without difficulty."

"But I brought him the coin Mr. Morris gave me," said the girl, confused.

"No. When you showed me the franc in my room at the hotel this afternoon, I substituted for it the one I already had. I wished to trap Hartmann, and I did not want him to get the real coin into his clutches."

Mlle. Mercier smiled joyfully. "Then you still have it!" she exclaimed. "Oh—I am so glad!"

Dumas's face fell. He looked at the girl with an expression of the deepest regret.

"I have been very foolish and overconfident," he said. "Instead of placing your property in safe keeping before coming here to-night, I placed it in my waistcoat-pocket. It was there when they knocked me down."

"But, exclaimed the girl, "they did not find it when they were searching you!"

Dumas explained in a few words how he had managed to secrete the coin in the box of cigars, and how, by some curious twist of fate, Hartmann had at the last moment taken the cigars along with him.

"He has the franc and does not know it," said Dumas. "Naturally, it will be only a question of a short while before he finds it. It is necessary that I should place him under arrest at the earliest possible moment."

"Have you any idea, then, where he is to be found?"

"I am sorry to say, mademoiselle, that I have not. I will first take you back to your hotel and after that I shall report the results of the night to the officials of the steamship company. I fear it will be necessary for them to call upon the police department for help.

"A description of Hartmann and the woman with him must be given, and a general alarm sent out. I can furnish them with the description. It should not be difficult to locate them. They will apprehend no danger to-night, for they think that by now both you and myself are dead."

Suddenly a new idea occurred to M. Dumas. He brought his hand down heavily on the table, then began to look for his hat.

"This gas has made me thick-headed," he growled. "We must hurry back to the Hôtel Rochambeau at once."

"I am ready," said the girl, adjusting her hat; "but why—"

"Don't you see? I told Hartmann that I had placed the one-franc-piece in the safe at the hotel. Naturally he and his companion will go there at once. What means they will take to get the coin I do not know, but that they will try to get it is certain."

He glanced at his watch, and saw that it was nearly one o'clock.

"They have a long start," he muttered, "but they could not accomplish much before midnight if they have burglary in mind. If we hurry we may get them yet. Come along, mademoiselle. We must find a taxi."

In a quarter of an hour they were driving down town at a high rate of speed.

CHAPTER X.
The Burglary.

It was close to half-past one when the taxicab containing M. Dumas and Mlle. Mercier reached the corner of Fifth Avenue and Twenty-second Street. Dumas had directed the chauffeur to stop there, instead of driving up to the entrance of the hotel.

He and his companion got out, dismissed the cab, and walked quickly down the street toward Sixth Avenue.

In a few moments they had reached the doorway of the hotel. Dumas quickly mounted the steps and began to pull the old-fashioned doorbell with great violence.

"For some time" there was no response; but he continued ringing, accompanying it by kicking loudly on the door.

Presently a tousled head emerged from one of the upper windows, and a voice both sleepy and angry demanded to know, to the accompaniment of a choice selection of French expletives, what was the cause of the row.

"As you perceive, monsieur," Dumas cried excitedly in French, "I cannot get in. Name of a dog! Do you then call this place a hotel?"

The man at the window began to mutter curses on the head of the night porter. "That rascal Francois again!" he cried. "The pig! Drunk, and on my 1812 brandy, I suppose!" Grumblingly he withdrew his head, and started down the stairs.

Dumas and his companion waited eagerly in the vestibule. In a few minutes they heard a great commotion within, above which the voice of the proprietor could be heard—bellowing with rage. "Idiot! Cochon! Canaille!" he cried, then threw open the door.

Dumas entered. Mlle. Mercier followed. The proprietor confronted them in his nightgown. His face was crimson with rage. "Behold, monsieur!" he cried, and waved his hands dramatically toward the little office.

At first, Dumas did not realize what he meant. Then he stepped inside, and saw at once that his fears had been realized.

Hartmann and his companion had not only burglarized the hotel safe, but, what was far more important, had already made good their escape.

The little office was in a condition of extreme disorder. The safe door stood open, and the floor in front of it was littered with papers and letters of all descriptions. The latter had all been torn open and hurriedly thrown aside.

On a chair near the window sat the unfortunate porter, blindfolded, gagged, and bound hand and foot. The proprietor strode over to him, and snatched the bandages from his eyes, and mouth. "Speak, you scoundrel!" he roared. "In the name of ten thousand devils! What has happened?"

The porter rose unsteadily.

"I was sitting in my chair reading the paper," he said. "There came a ring at the door bell. I opened the door. Then a one seized me by the throat." He rubbed his neck ruefully. "I was choked, messieurs. I could not cry out—I could do nothing. Then they tied me up as you have seen, and put me in the chair. After that I heard an explosion, very faint, and that is all that I know."

"They!" exclaimed the proprietor. "You say they! Name of a cabbage! Who are 'they'?"

"A man and a woman, monsieur. That is all that I know. The man had a short, black beard."

The proprietor began to pick up the scattered letters and papers. "All my private correspondence!" he wept. "And my beautiful new safe! It is destroyed."

"Was there any considerable money within, monsieur?" Dumas asked.

"The good God be praised, no! But my beautiful safe! See it is all bent! And my papers—my letters! Why should these canaille have destroyed my letters?" He continued to pick them up, gazing at them ruefully.

"Evidently, monsieur, they were searching for something," remarked Dumas quietly, "something, in fact, which I happen to know they did not find."

"Ha." The proprietor sprang to his feet and pointed an accusing finger. "You know something of this matter, eh?"

"A little," laughed Dumas, as he began to make a critical examination of the safe and the objects surrounding it. "I am a detective, monsieur. I hoped to come in time to prevent this outrage; but I was, it seems, too late. I am glad that no money or valuables appear to have been taken. If you will permit I will endeavor to make a few investigations."

There were, however, as he fully realized, no investigations that he could make which would be likely to tell him anything more than he already knew. Hartmann and his companion had been there and gone. It was scarcely likely that they had left any clue as to where they were going. He glanced about in despair.

Then he bethought himself of the night porter. Possibly the latter might have heard some word dropped by the burglars which would afford a clue to their movements.

He questioned the man but the latter appeared to know nothing. It was clear that he had been too badly frightened by the whole affair to remember anything of importance, even had he heard it.

Dumas turned to Mlle. Mercier. "I will say good night, mademoiselle," he said. "I hope that it will not be long before I am able to bring these rascals to justice, and at the same time restore to you your missing one-franc-piece. Do not meet or see any one, no matter whom, outside the hotel. I will advise you as soon as I have any news of importance. Adieu!" He turned to the proprietor, requested him to send the night porter for his satchel, paid his bill, and departed.

IF KIDNEY'S AC BAD TAKE SALTS

says Backache is Sign You Have Been Eating Too Much Meat

When you wake up with backache and dull misery in the kidney region it generally means you have been eating too much meat, says a well-known authority. Meat forms uric acid which overworks the kidneys in their effort to filter it from the blood, and they become sort of paralyzed and loggy. When your kidneys get sluggish and clog you must relieve them, like you relieve your bowels; removing all the body's urinous waste, else you have backache, sick headache, dizzy spells; your stomach sours, tongue is coated, and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine is cloudy, full of sediment, channels often get sore, water scalds, and you are obliged to seek relief two or three times during the night.

Either consult a good, reliable physician at once or get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to clean and stimulate sluggish kidneys, also to neutralize acids in the urine so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is a life saver for regular meat eaters. It is inexpensive, cannot injure and makes a delightful, effervescent lithia-water drink.

Pastor Elopes With Organist

SAVANNAH, Ga., Oct. 21.—One of the most efficiently arranged and executed elopements in recent years in Georgia resulted in the marriage of the Rev. Ernest Altman, of this city, and Miss Ula Mae Majors, of Milltown, near here. They were married at Homerville after as fast a trip across three counties as a high powered automobile could be induced to make.

As the last words of the ceremony were being uttered Mr. Majors, the girl's father, who had been opposed to the marriage, but is not now, arrived at the home of the Rev. M. M. Marshall, who united the couple. It was too late, and Mr. Majors, exhilarated by the fastest automobile ride he ever had, forgave the couple.

With parental opposition established by the failure of an attempt at elopement a year ago, the young couple had arranged to try again. Mr Altman recently had been called to the pastorate of the Fourth Baptist church here and after extended communication by mail the young folks agreed that the only chance of eloping was to have Mr. Altman meet Miss Majors when she was actually with her father and to begin the flight at once. Circumstances did not favour giving the elopers the slightest start toward a clergyman.

Services were in progress last night at the Milltown Baptist church when Mr. Altmann, in an automobile owned and driven by Deputy Sheriff S. W. Elliott, drew up to the entrance of the little edifice. Miss Majers is organist, there and persons in the congregation recalled that a hymn nearly was halted as the sound of an automobile horn was heard.

When the services ended Miss Majers walked at her father's side until she reached the sidewalk. Then she ran forward and jumped into the automobile and away it went. Within three minutes Mr. Majers was in his own automobile and the chase began.

Four stops were made by the young couple in their effort to find a clergyman, and each time they resumed their journey the automobile in pursuit either was seen or heard. Each time they regained lead enough to try another stop when a clergyman's home was reached.

London women now have a hostel established at 74 South Audley street, for women who have wounde drelatives in London.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

A Change Of Heart

By WILLIAM CHANDLER

Jim Edwards was young and frisky and full of Old Nick. He was riding on a suburban train one day on his way to the city when an old gentleman of eminently respectable appearance came into the car and took a seat beside him. Jim was reading in a morning journal an account of a prizefight. The gentleman took from his pocket a copy of the Missionary Intelligencer, opened it and began to peruse it.

"Have you seen an account of the bout between Andy Sheehan and the Philadelphia Kid, sir?" asked Jim in a deferential tone.

"No. I don't read accounts of such inhuman transactions."

"I suppose you wouldn't care to see a fight of that kind. But don't you think if we kill off all blood spilling affairs it's bad for the military spirit? We must have wars, you know, even if to protect ourselves from a foreign enemy, and if we young fellows should get too soft we'd all have to knuckle under in case of an invasion. For my part I think the way the Kid stood up against Sheehan was admirable. He broke the big man's jaw and let a pint of blood from his nose."

At this the gentleman turned his back squarely on the young man and buried himself in his journal.

Jim, who had been amusing himself with the old man, smiled inwardly, much pleased at the shock he had given him. When they reached the city Jim waited till the passengers by the door was cleared of the outgoing passengers, then arose to go himself. On the seat beside him he espied a pocketbook. It must have belonged to the gentleman who had sat beside him, and Jim hurried after him, but failed to catch him. An examination of the contents of the pocketbook revealed the name of Howard Spingler and his address, besides some $20 in bills. In a pocket by itself was a small photograph of a girl evidently in her teens. Jim fell in love with it on sight.

Instead of sending the find to the address Jim waited till evening, when he thought he might possibly get sight of the original of the photograph, then went to the house, rang the bell and told the butler who answered it that he would like to see Mr. Spingler. He was ushered into the library, where sat the owner of the pocketbook and near by, doing some fancy work, the girl of the photograph. When the old gentleman saw the advocate of prizefighting he frowned. Jim handed him the book and said:

"After you left the train this morning, sir, I found this where you had been sitting. It contained your name and address, so I am enabled to return it to you."

Mr. Spingler, without unbending, took the pocketbook. He was too much of a gentleman to examine the contents to see that all had been returned, but he was not cordial. He simply thanked Jim and waited for him to withdraw.

"Don't you think, father," said the girl, surprised at her father's want of warmth in acknowledging his obligation, "that inasmuch as the gentleman has taken the trouble to return your pocketbook in person we should ask him to rest before going?"

The father's mind was on Jim's prizefighting proclivities, and he was not to be moved to any courtesy to one of that kind.

"Young man," he said, "I have thanked you for returning my pocketbook. I do not offer you a reward, for you do not look like one who would accept it. Indeed, I was surprised to meet with one having the appearance of a gentleman advocating the barbarity of prizefighting."

Jim colored under the reproof to the roots of his hair. He had had his fun with the old gentleman, and he was now paying the price. The young lady took pity on him.

"Why, papa," she said, "so many persons take an interest in such matters that you can't blame one young man for doing so. After all, I don't think as many persons are killed in the prize ring as at football, and you know you shouted and waved at brother when he knocked down five men and broke the leg of one carrying the ball to goal."

Mr. Spingler looked embarrassed. Jim, bestowing a silent blessing on the young lady, with regained courage pushed on to undo the damage he had done by his facetiousness on the train.

"Ralph Spingler!" he exclaimed. "The great Pennsylvania football player?"

"My son," said the old man proudly.

"I've seen him play some of his best games. During his supremacy on the gridiron there was no man who could down him. I congratulate you, sir, on having such a son."

"You've seen him play!" exclaimed the old man, his eyes lighting at the mention of his son's prowess.

"Indeed I have. I witnessed the game in which he fell—accidentally, of course—on Simpson and crushed him. That was a glorious game. Your noble boy carried the ball to goal amid the hurrahs of every person present."

"He won the game!" cried Mr. Spingler. "Polly, bring a decanter and some glasses. Our friend must drink to your brother's health."

That is the way Jim Edwards made his wife's acquaintance. It looked equally at first, but it came out all right.

THEATRES VS. ZEPPELINS

How Some English Crowds Behave When Monsters Threaten

A theatrical manager says: I was present at the first London Zeppelin raid. The first alarm was about 10.30 p.m. Provincial theatres are out by that hour, but few get out so early in the Metropolis. At one theatre, however, the performance was over and the audience was out, but the artistes were still in the dressing rooms. The guns and the booming could be heard everywhere. Most of the artistes and stage employes flew down underneath the stage. The building lady was on her knees praying, some were calm, many frightened, but to me the funny part of it was the gentleman who played the hero, the one who walks about protecting the heroine and defying the villain, seemed to be the only really terrified one—his teeth were literally chattering.

At another theatre not many yards away the last act was being played. The actresses and actors went on with the play as if there were no guns to be heard nor Zeppelins in the world—yet there was one always overhead. I saw it. Above all, the principal lady went on speaking her part and showed not the slightest tremor. No panic! In South London a lady of my company was in a theatre doing some business, and was hurried down a flight of stone steps, and nearly trampled over her in haste for the doors. She told me the men seemed more frightened than the women.

During one raid George Robey was playing the principal part at the Theatre Royal, Manchester. Warning had come that the Zeps were on their way and that the electric light was to be turned off at headquarters. The management requested Robey to tell the audience the news and to ask them to leave the theatre quietly as the Zeps had already reached Sheffield en route for Manchester. The audience treated this as one of George's gags (he is ever guessing) and laughed uproariously at the joke. They would not be convinced, and it was not until the manager himself came on and announced it was no joke, that the audience began dispersing in a quiet, orderly and sensible manner. No casualties!

FIERCE TESTING FOR ARTILLERY OFFICERS

Spartan, Scientific Training Makes Canadians Leaders in Eight Weeks —A Novelist's Experience

Lieutenant Dawson of the artillery —Coningsby Dawson, long-haired novelist, if you please, before the war—told a harrowing and amusing tale of his entry into the artillery by way of the Royal School at Kingston, Ont. He said: "It's difficult to get into the Royal School of Artillery. The artillery is the aristocracy of the army, as the cavalry was before this latest war. The girls in Kingston will walk out with a common gunner from the artillery when they wouldn't think of walking out with an officer from the infantry. And to get into the Royal School of Artillery you are supposed to need a tremendous pull. I found that the different people I went to see were not in the least impressed by my literary reputation and my position as war correspondent. They saw that I was a civilian, and saw nothing to make them believe that I would be desirable as an artillery officer.

"Finally, after learning the important lesson of my own unimportance by going through department after department and getting snubbed every time, I decided to make a final attempt, and to go to the very top to do it. So I went to Sir Sam Hughes. Now, Sir Sam likes you orderliness you at once. He seemed to like me. He shook hands with me and told me to sit down. He said, 'I'll give you your chance. I'll send you to the Royal School of Artillery.'"

Horrors of War Begin

"I soon found what the Royal School of Artillery meant. It meant not only a mental test, but the severest of physical and moral tests. In fact, for me the horrors of war had started the moment I landed in Kingston. It meant getting up at 5 o'clock on a dark, cold winter morning and being on parade in the snow at 6. The penalty for failing to be on parade was a fourteen miles' stiff trip bareback, from which a man usually returned with the feeling that every bone in his body was broken.

"The students at the Royal School of Artillery must do a year's work in eight weeks. I took my honors degree at Oxford, but I never really knew what hard work meant till I went to the school. You see, artillery officers must know all about the laying of guns, obtaining lines of fire, and all that. They must know how to hit things that they can't see—so gunnery is trigonometry straight through. Then I had never heard of range gears and jamming plates, but I had to learn all about them and to know how to take a gun apart and put it together again. I had to know all about ammunition, propellants, detonators, the weights and the effects of different charges—and all this is chemistry.

Universal Knowledge

"And there was a great deal of practical surveying—we had to learn how to use the director, which is like a surveyor's transit, but much more delicate—used in sending down angles from the observation station to the battery, to lay the guns on unseen targets. Then there is map reading—one of the most essential things at the front. They get all the ranges by means of maps. They give you a map and say, 'Take up your position here and aim at target so-and-so'—and you must recognize your position by the map.

"Then there are riding, elementary veterinary surgery, and all the things that are understood by the term horse management. There were foot drill, riding drill, and, of course, battery drill—for some of these men go out from the school to become battery commanders, the leaders of 150 men. Naturally, the instructors have to use a certain amount of violence in cramming all this information into the heads of a lot of dubs! And we were such terrible dubs! When we first were lined up we had to number off twenty-eight times before we got it right!"

Immelmann Abstained

Berlin reports: In one of his last letters before being killed in an air battle, Lieutenant Immelmann, the Fokker champion, wrote to a friend that he had become a total abstainer from liquor, "having taken occasion to observe that even the smallest quantity of alcoholic liquor lessen one's capacity to reach quick decisions, thinking power, and presence of mind."

HAIG IS CANNY SCOT

Organizer of Armies in Field Discusses Britain's Task

The character of Haig, the great commander of British armies, is described by Frederick Palmer, who writes as follows: At a crisis of the retreat from Mons General Haig remarked quietly as if he were giving a direction to an aide: "We shall have to hold on here for a while if we all die for it." There is never any flurry about these modern scientific soldier organizers. Again during the retreat when a certain general became somewhat demoralized Sir Douglas took him by the arm and walked up and down with him in silence until he was over his fit of nerves on that terrible August day. Those who work with him know that his sign of anger is a prolonged silence of a telling kind. He has a temper but does not let it get past his lips, they say. He has, too, a keen sense of humor with a Scotch flavor.

The impression he leaves on a caller is that of a leader without illusions; a soldier who sees with a soldier's logic, who is not afraid to be patient. "In your Civil War," he said, "it was a case of raising armies of untrained men to fight armies of untrained men, while with us the small nucleus of regular officers who survived the retreat had to train even larger forces to meet a military machine which had had forty years of preparation. Not only man to man, but in organization, must we make ourselves superior to our powerful enemy. The training of battalions and the manufacture of guns in England and their transfer to France represented only the first stage of real preparation for our task. Here they must be organized into divisions, corps and armies under the actual conditions of warfare before they could become worthily effective as a whole in any decisive effort against a foe whose staff training, reinforced by experience in the field must remain excellent, however exhausted, he becomes. Every day he grows weaker and we grow stronger. Owing to the indomitable spirit of our officers and men in learning we are accomplishing what seemed the impossible to many soldiers at the outset of the war. Our cause gives us strength; for we are fighting for civilization. Those who have looked to us for victory will have their patience rewarded."

A lieutenant in the trenches knows as much of when the blow will be struck as a corps commander or a staff department head. A quiet order from that quiet room and then the struggle, which by the token of the commander's strong chin and imperturbability, he will carry through with unbending resolution and Scotch stubbornness."

DISLOCATES MUSCLES

Strange Feats of Doctor-Private in Montreal Unit

At a sporting and musical evening given by the Irish-Canadian Rangers at Valcartier, Dr. A. Whitman of New York, enlisted as a private, gave an exhibition that was easily the feature of the evening. Doctor Whitman is possessed of lax ligaments and can perform more dislocations of the human body than any person living. One of the most dangerous of his acts is the lowering of the heart four inches. His heart can plainly be felt beating in the centre of the abdomen. He extends his height four and a half inches, and adds a length of eighteen inches to his arm.

ITALY SEIZES STORED EGGS.

Steps to Stop Speculators Withholding from Consumers.

Rome, Oct. 23.—The municipal authorities at Milan have seized 100 cars containing 15,000,000 eggs as the result of a campaign to prevent speculation. Milan, Rome and other centres have been eggless for the last week, notwithstanding the existence of immense stocks. It is expected that the Government will fix a uniform price of three cents throughout Italy and seize and sell all eggs at this price.

BRITISH CAVALRY AT SOMME—AN UNUSUAL SIGHT IN THIS WAR OF BIG GUNS—A very unusual sight in this war of big guns and trenches is this column of British cavalry marching over captured territory on the Western front which might be imagined as belonging to an earlier war.

DESCRIBES CAVALRY CHARGE IN FRANCE

Officer of Deccan Horse Regiment, Tells How Mounted Men Got Back into Action

DID NOT WANT PRISONERS.

But Eight Germans Who Threw Away Their Rifles and Called "Pity," Were Taken Alive.

During the first two years of the war cavalry played no part in the great battles fought on the western front. The men of this arm of the service were used in the trenches to reinforce the infantry. Recently, however, the cavalry got its chance and how well the mounted army responded is indicated in a letter written by an officer of the famous Deccan Horse of the British Army to his wife in Ire land. A copy of the letter, as given out recently by the British Official Press Bureau, tells the story of the terrible ride the Deccan Horse made on the French front. The letter reads:

"At 6.30 we started our famous ride into the enemy country every now and then coming under heavy shell fire—shrapnel and high explosive. No one can believe, without seeing, what a state the ground is in; there is not room for a table cloth on any part of the ground there without some part of it touching a shell hole, so you can imagine the regiment galloping over it at full gallop, barbed-wire—well cut by shell fire—old trenches, dead bodies ,and every sort of debris lying in every direction. Words fail me to describe it.

"That was for about three miles; then full tilt down a steep bank like the Haggard field, but steeper, into a very famous valley, where the shrapnel got worse, as we were spotted by one of their sausage balloons. This was soon driven down by the fire of our batteries, which just smothered it with shrapnel. Here we went through our infantry, who cheered us madly as we galloped my, all wishing us luck. On we went, past the remains of guns and everything—tons of ammunition and abandoned material and dead Huns everywhere; and we passed here an enormous gun they had left behind, so really I suppose it was us that took it. We were under cover here for half a mile, but suddenly coming out of the valley, we had to turn sharp to the right up another little valley, and here we came under terrific, but rather inaccurate, machine gun fire from two directions. I cannot tell you anything about casualties, but it was here my chestnut mare was killed. We went about a mile up this valley, and then got some cover under a bank. Here we stopped for ten minutes, and then we got orders for our squadron to go on as advance guard in a certain direction.

It was now about 7.30 in the evening, and there were twenty-four aeroplanes hovering over us, and one monoplane came down to about 200 feet and fired his machine guns on the Huns just over us—going round and round—the finest sight I have ever seen. Well we moved out under a heavy fire and got on about half a mile. During this advance we rounded up eight prisoners, while between us and the British regiment, I suppose, we stuck with sword and lance about forty of them, a glorious sight.

"Our men were splendid and didn't want to take any prisoners, but these eight had chucked away their arms, so we couldn't very well do them in. They were simply terrified, and one clung on to my leg and kept calling "Pity! Pity!" his eyes starting out of his head. Poor devil, I pitied him, and we sent him back to the regiment. We dismounted in a little hollow then and went on on foot through a good crop of wheat full of shell holes and dead Huns. Of course, we were creeping all the way, as the fire was very hot. At last, after going a quarter of a mile, we got to the flat top of the hill, driving them before us. Here we had to stop, as the ground was being swept by rifle and machine gun fire, and they were now shelling us heavily. We got our Hotchkiss guns into action and set to work.

"By crawling slowly forward we got a field of fire, and could see the Huns plainly and a battery about half a mile ahead. We plugged a few here, and then it happened to get dark, and we had to retire about 300 yards to a better position and dig in for the night. This we did all right, the Hun making a feeble charge as we did it. I was along at the time with a message, so I let fly six rounds at them with my revolver, and they all lay down. However, it was not a healthy spot, and I had to crawl back, and rejoined the squadron. We got our horses, and came back and rejoined the regiment. One shell landed in the middle of us as we mounted. These tin hats are good, especially for shrapnel.

"Well, we got back and dug in like blazes. They made two weak attacks during the night, and shelled us all the time, and the star shells they sent up all night were like a fireworks display—a weird sight. One Boche crawled up to one of our listening posts in the dark, and we shot him and brought him in, but he died soon after. We hung on there until 4 o'clock, put up wire in front of us, and our battery helped us well. Infantry relieved us then; they had just got up.

"You see our job was to push on as far as we could, and hold the line to give the 'last' time to get up. So we did our job all right. We then rode back—'but not the six hundred.' We were treated to tear shells on the way back—awful sore on the eyes, and my good 'chestnut horse has both eyes bunged up to-day. Saw more wonderful sights coming back. We got water in the valley were started from, and then rode on back to this field where we came first from our camp. Terrible work to-day with the horses, and going through their kits. The Divisional General came round last night and congratulated us, and to-day we got congratulations from the army commander. Of course, we were all very bucked and proud. We slept sound last night, I can tell you, on the bare ground under the sky. Thank God, it is fine!"

MARTIAL ELOQUENCE

"Now, then, No. 7,' the corporal shouted, "we'll make another start—that is, if you've quite finished feelin' if your back hair happens to be on straight this morning. It's you I'm talking to—third man from the left of the front rank. I haven't the pleasure of knowing your name, but I expect to be writin' it down for an hour's extra duty pretty soon.

"Now, then, look to your front—squad, 'tshun, left dress! Turn your eyes to the left—without squinting like Chinese dummies—if you can. Stand up in the ranks, too, like soldiers; not like a measly row of lop-sided, spindle-shanked, Cockney shop-boys! Stick your chests out and put your stummicks somewhere out of sight altogether. There's 'arf of you with figures like bags of potatoes. Strike me crimson if I ever saw such a mob! Hit you in the centre—the ginger-headed man, I mean—don't grin like that; this ain't no perishin' beauty competition—not by no manner of means."

EAGER FRENCH YOUTHS

Class of 1917 Were Pitifully Anxious to be Enrolled

La Rancontouse wrote from Paris: "There are no conscientious objectors in France. A French army surgeon who had just finished examining nearly ten thousand young men of the class of 1917 told me that every one of them was eager to be accepted for service. The disappointment of those who were found unfit was pitiful.

"A lame boy," he said, "who made desperate efforts to conceal that one leg was more than one inch shorter than the other, and who had lost his only two brothers in the battles near Souches, said to me with tears in his eyes, 'Please do not reject me. I am as fit as any of my comrades for trench war and if you do not think so, you put me into the cavalry.' His sorrow when I had to send him away was heartbroken. I have had more than one consumptive tell me that open air life in the trenches was just the thing for them.

"We must go back to the first days of Christianity, to the days of the martyrs, to find young people so eager to offer themselves, to rush into danger, to fight and suffer for an ideal. Those who have seen our young soldier under fire are not surprised at the eagerness of our boys to get into the fighting line. A country whose youth is inspired by a spirit like this cannot be conquered. The chief of the committee examining these boys was an old major who had been severely wounded in the Champagne. When we were finished with our work one day, he said to me: 'To think that I am no longer considered fit to take boys like these into battle! I would give anything to be allowed to do so. Even if the Boches should finish me, it would make me ten years younger to command such soldiers.'"

FINE RUSSIAN BLUFF

Small Army of Middle-aged Took Many More Austrians

A Russian officer visiting London told the following story of the siege of Przemysl: "The siege was very much like the game of poker. We won by a most beautiful bluff. Our troops were really poor, most of them being older territorials. We were about 50,000 strong and thought we were investing 40,000. Imagine our surprise when the fortress surrendered and endless columns of men came marching out. In one place I saw with my own eyes two hundred unarmed Russians guarding 8,000 prisoners.

"General Selivanoff, our commander in chief, asked the Austrian commander how many men he had. '120,000 men,' was the answer and Selivanoff devoutly crossed himself and exclaimed: 'Thank God!' When he informed the Austrian general that he himself had only 50,000 troops, the other was equally surprised, for he had estimated the Russian strength at 200,000."

Read His Obituary

Franz Weiser, son of a baker of Hamerkirchen, Austria, returned home from the Russian front on furlough. The next morning his parents received an official communication from the army administration informing them that their son had been killed in battle near Rawanowitchi. The "dead" soldier, after a hearty laugh, notified the ministry of war that he would report for duty at the expiration of his leave.

IRRITABLE NERVES RESTORED AND HEALTH REGAINED IN A SIMPLE WAY

The man or woman who is run-down, not feeling up to the mark, perhaps, irritable, nervous or sleepless can well afford to learn about the wonderful results the newly discovered blood-food is giving to folks that use it.

There is wonderful power in this new blood-food, and every weak, pallid person can be quickly nourished back to health that uses it as directed.

After each meal, with a sip or two of water, you simply take two little chocolate-coated tablets, sold in all drug stores under the name of "FERROZONE."

The effect is noticeable at once. You feel happier, brighter, more contented. That old-time feeling of weariness departs—you forget your "nerves" and no longer get irritable or cross over trifling annoyances.

There is a reason for this change and that reason consists of the fact that Ferrozone contains blood-making materials you can get in no other way.

Ferrozone makes the blood tingle and sing with new vitality. This ensures lots of nourishment and strength being supplied to every part of the body.

No wonder the eyes brighten and the cheeks ranimate color and happiness: With abundance of strength, a keen appetite, good digestion and plenty of sound sleep—all the result of Ferrozone—you quickly feel as if life held new charms and pleasures.

NEW ECONOMIC ENTENTE

Alliance For Poses Against Inroads Of Huns

"The political re-modelling which will follow after the war should be accompanied by a veritable economic revolution," writes Raphael-Georges Levy, member of the French Institute. "The Allies will no longer be foolish enough to leave the greater part of their commerce in the hands of the enemy. They have discovered that they can supply each other mutually with all the raw materials and manufactured goods which they formerly received from Germany and Austria. They know that the 900 million human beings who inhabit France, England, Russia, Japan, Belgium, and Serbia with their colonies form an immense field of consumers, capable of absorbing the entire production of the Allies.

"It will be a difficult and exceedingly laborious task to arrange their future custom policy, but this work will be insignificant in comparison with the combined effort they are now making on land and sea. The essential thing will be to approach this part of our common task in a broad-minded and liberal manner and always keep the goal in sight which must be reached to seal the military compact, concluded in the fact of the German danger, by a close and definitive economic entente. In the field too, as on the battle-field we are sure of victory."

War Office Language

London Times:—The Earl of Derby in a speech at a banquet in his honor said inter alia:—When he (Lord Derby) first went to the War Office certain papers were sent to him in what he could only describe as hieroglyphics, and when he asked a certain witty member of the Staff whether it was possible, just for the sake of idiots like himself—(laughter)—occasionally to put the words into English, the member of the Staff replied that he always started by doing that. He put the instructions into English and sent them to the proper department to put into War Office language; and if they came back in such a state that he could not understand them he knew it was all right.

Democracy!

At Broadstairs, where he went to the same school as that attended by his brother, Prince Henry, before the latter went to Eton, the people have grown to know the youthful Prince quite well. Almost every day during term time he was to be seen walking in the town with his schoolmates or joining in games with them on the beach. No fuss was made of him. He was on the same footing as the other lads, and enjoyed himself as any ordinary, happy schoolboy should.

Austrian Premier Shot By Editor

"If you please, gentlemen, I know perfectly well what I have done. I shall not resist arrest."

In reply to a question as to the reason for his act he said at first: "That I shall have to answer in court." In half an hour he admitted he had been actuated by political motives.

Instantly Killed.

Physicians and high police and state officials reached the scene of the shooting within a few minutes, but found that the premier was lifeless. News of the assassination spread like wildfire and was received with indignation and sorrow.

The assassin, who is 38 years of age, is a son of Dr. Victor Alder, a reichsrat deputy and also a Socialist of mild type. By a strange coincidence the father was speaking before the reichsrat in 1911 when Count Stuergkh was shot at six times by the Dalmatian Socialist, Vakusch. On that occasion the count was uninjured.

Count Stuergkh has been a prominent figure in Austrian political affairs for years. He was minister of public works in the cabinet formed in 1909, at the retirement of which, in October of 1911, he was asked to form a new ministry.

The count was born in 1859 at Graz, was educated at the University of Graz, and entered the service of the state in 1881. He began his parliamentary career on March 13, 1891, when he was elected to the reichsrath. In 1894 he became a ministerial director in the department of which he afterwards became the head. In the interval he was out of office for a time, resigning after the fall of the Wendsch-Gratz cabinet.

PARALYZED LIMBS.

To-day it is sleeplessness, headaches, digestive trouble, and irritability. Soon thing you have some form of paralysis has developed. Mr. Alex. Hansberry, Moore Street, St. Catharines, Ont., writes: "Nervous trouble developed into paralysis of the limbs so that I became helpless. Doctors failed me, but after using some of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food I resumed work and now feel better than I did for twenty years."

CROWN'S RIGHTS IN WAR

State Can Take Your Property, But May Compensate

It was generally understood, of course, that the Crown in time of war had the right to take over what lands or buildings it considered necessary. The question was raised, however, in the King's Bench of Great Britain, whether an owner who was thus dispossessed had not a right to compensation. The matter came before the Court by a "petition of right," from an aerodrome company who asked for a declaration that they were lawfully entitled to proper compensation. Mr. Justice Avory gave the following judgment: He had come to the conclusion that His Majesty, by virtue of his war prerogative under statutes, through his representatives, was, under the then existing circumstances, entitled to take possession of the land and premises, and was still entitled to do so, without making compensation.

In addition, the effect of the Defence of the Realm Act conferred on the competent Naval and Military authorities during the continuance of the war absolute and unconditional power to take possession of land and buildings, and do any other act interfering with private property, wholly for the public safety or the security of the realm. This enactment repealed any right of compensation, if it existed in time of war, in earlier acts. The suppliants had, therefore, failed to establish any right in law; and judgment must be for the Crown. He thought, however, that the suppliants were entitled under the Royal Commission of Inquiry appointed in March, 1915, to apply for compensation in respect of any direct and substantial loss incurred, and damage sustained by reason of interference with their property and business under the circumstances of the case.

Believes She Was Saved From Stroke of Paralysis

All One Side Was Cold and Powerless, when She Began Using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food

A dead nerve cell can never be replaced. In this way it is different to other cells of the human body. But feeble, wasted nerve cells may be restored ,and herein lies hope.

In this fact is also a warning to take note of such symptoms as sleeplessness and loss of energy and ambition, and restore the vitality to the nervous system before some form of helplessness results.

Nervous prostration, locomotor ataxia and paralysis are the natural results of neglecting to keep the nerves in healthful condition. The use of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food when you suspect there is something wrong, will soon restore vitality to the nervous system, and thereby prevent serious developments.

Mrs. Merritt Nichols, R. R. No. 3, Dundalk, Ont., writes: "I take pleasure in writing to tell you the great benefit I have derived from the use of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. I was so nervous I could not sleep, and found it hard to get my work done at all, but, having no help at the time, had to do the best I could. Finally my left arm became powerless and cold, and this continued to get worse until my whole side was affected, head and all. I decided to try Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, and the first box helped me so much that I used several, and believe that this treatment saved me from having a paralytic stroke. It has built me up wonderfully, and I can recommend it most heartily, believing that if more Nerve Food were used there would be much less sickness."

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food cures in nature's way by nourishing the feeble, wasted nerves back to health and vigour. Fifty cents a box, all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

CHILD'S YOKE DRESS.

By Anabel Worthington.

You will find much to admire in a frock like this one. If you will reproduce the design, using remnants of light and dark materials, you will just glory in the result.

At once the yoke is cut square and the dress body is covered to it, while at front the yoke extends either side of the centre in tab effect. An embroidery or a button [illegible] will give it further interest. The neck finishes without a collar, but has a scalloped edge. A belt of the material in the yoke takes care of the fulness, so that the part below it falls in neat folds. Elbow sleeves have a band cuff to match, and a bias fold of the material heading the skirt hem is very attractive.

An illustrated, this little model makes the most of two materials, but one may omit the bias fold without taking away any of the pretty effect, and for a very small girl the dress may hang, omitting the belt. In all one material the design may be developed, giving a touch of color with just the yoke decoration in blue or preferred color.

The pattern, No. 7,957, is cut in sizes 2, 4 and 6 years. To make in size 4 will require 1¾ yards 36 inch material in light tone and ¾ yard dark goods.

You may obtain the pattern by sending [illegible] to the office of this publication.

Please remember to give your name and address as well as the [illegible] pattern required, and age of a child.

Price of pattern 10 cents.

STOMACH MEDICINES ARE DANGEROUS

DOCTORS NOW ADVISE MAGNESIA

Just how dangerous it is to indiscriminately dose the stomach with drugs and medicines is often not realized until too late. It seems so simple to swallow a dose of some special mixture or take tablets of soda, pepsin, bismuth, etc. after meals, and the folly of this drugging is not apparent until, perhaps years afterward, when it is found that gastric ulcers have almost eaten their way through the stomach walls. Remedies are then unavailing; it is in the early stages when indigestion, dyspepsia, heartburn, flatulence, etc. indicate excessive acidity of the stomach and fermentation of food contents that precaution should be taken. Drugs and medicines are unsuitable and often dangerous—they have little or no influence upon the harmful acid, and that is why doctors are discarding them and adopting; sufferers from indigestion and stomach trouble to get rid of the dangerous acid and keep the food contents bland and sweet by taking a little pure bisurated magnesia instead. Bisurated Magnesia is an absolutely pure antacid which can be readily obtained from any drug store. It is completely harmless, is practically tasteless and a teaspoonful taken in a little warm or cold water after meals, will usually be found quite sufficient to instantly neutralize excessive acidity of the stomach and prevent all possibility of the food fermenting.

A New York fashion authority declares since the purple velvet hat is being sold from $1.00 up, every one of the fashionable set has bought or ordered a black velvet hat to judge by talk, and the milliners are saying that the white has will be ultra-smart from now until Christmas.

When buying a pair of tan shoes have them polished at once before wearing. This will keep them from spotting. If the shoes are regularly polished (by yourself if you want a touch) they will wear much longer.

A CHALLENGE TO THE MANHOOD OF CANADA

Serbian Troops Have Resumed Their Drive Toward Monastir

Capture German-Bulgar Trenches to Depth of Half a Mile and Inflict Heavy Losses on the Enemy---British Consolidate and Secure Against Counter Attacks the Trenches Won in Yesterday's Advance Against Bapaume ---Mackensen's Forces Have Reached the Constanza-Cernavoda Railway.

CAPTURE OF CONSTANZA NOT MINIMIZED

LONDON, October 24.—The Serbian first army advanced on the whole front in the Cerna region Sunday, taking enemy first line trenches, it was officially announced to-day, and on Sunday night won fresh victories north of Veljesselo. These advances followed the repulse of fierce German and Bulgar attacks against the Serbian-Vardar division.

PARIS, October 24.—Serbian troops have resumed the advance against Monastir, capturing German-Bulgar trenches to a depth of half a mile, and inflicting heavy losses on the enemy, it was officially announced to-day.

The Serbian gain was made immediately after the repulse of several enemy attacks by Serbian artillery. Fresh German units recently arrived at the Cerna River front co-operated with the Bulgars. All operations have stopped on the Struma front on the Allies' right wing because of floods. On the Lake Doiran front artilery activity has been very lively. The British took an enemy trench near Nakukovo, capturing twenty Germans.

Little Booty Was Taken At Constanza

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

LONDON, October 24.—The capture of Constanza by the Germans and Bulgarians was admitted in a Bucharest message to-day. It is asserted by Bucharest, that the enemy took little booty since the evacuation of the port was decided upon some time ago. The Kaiser has sent congratulations to Czar Ferdinand of Bulgaria.

British Aeroplane Wins Air Drill

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

LONDON, October 24.—A British naval aeroplane attacked four German seaplanes near Ostend yesterday afternoon bringing down and completely destroying one and driving off the others, it was officially announced to-day.

Violent Artillery Fighting Reported

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

PARIS (French Official), October 24.—A rather violent artillery combat on the front of Binches-Ablaincourt, south of the Somme, was reported to-day, but no important infantry action occurred during the night. The War Office announced that a French aeroplane swooped down and attacked a German trench in the St. Vaast Wood.

Trying To Form Coalition Cabinet

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

LONDON, October 24.—Roumanian leaders are attempting to form a coalition cabinet including leading members of the Opposition, but their efforts thus far have failed, said a Petrograd despatch to the Daily News to-day, describing the feeling in Bucharest as "serious."

The London papers made no attempt to minimize the importance to the Germans, of the capture of Constanza, pointing out that probably great supplies were stored there. They regard the advance against Cernavoda and the great bridgehead leading into Roumania as the more serious menace to Roumania, however.

British Troops Are Consolidating Gains

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

LONDON, October 24.—British troops last night fully consolidated and secured against counter attack the 1,000 yards of German trenches won in yesterday's advance against Bapaume on the line east of Gueudecourt and Les Boeufs, it was officially announced to-day. There was intermittent shelling on the Somme front during the night. General Haig to-day contradicted the German claim that the capture of Schwaben redoubt and the advance at Le Sars were made at the expense of heavy British losses. The troops engaged lost only 1,200 men, he reported, and brought in 1,000 German prisoners.

PTE. F. SULLIVAN REPORTED MISSING, TURNS UP SAFELY

Peterboro Boy Had Exciting Series of Adventures, During a Night Attack in Which German Machine Guns and Bombs, Played a Prominent Part.

BURIED BY A SHELL

The last mail from overseas has brought glad news to Mrs. M. Sullivan, 267 Bethune street, whose son, Pte. Fred Sullivan, Canadian Infantry was officially reported missing last week. The news came first hand—from Pte. Sullivan himself in a letter just received which reads as follows:

France, Oct. 12, 1916

Dear Mother,—I am writing you from hospital or rather from a field ambulance rest station. I am not wounded, just run down a bit and stiff about the legs as I was buried to the waist by a shell. I had a little picnic all my own with the Germans. We charged about 9.30 at night and then the fun started. The German machine guns began to play on us when we got within about fifty yards of them and then they started the bombs flying. Well, it finally got too warm for us and we were ordered to retreat. Then my fun commenced.

I am in the Lewis machine gun section and as I started back I saw my No. 1 in a shell hole with the gun. He was all in and wanted to leave the gun where it was, but of course, "big man me" was bound we wouldn't lose the gun so I gave him my rifle and I took the Lewis and started in. I just got about ten yards when bang! went a shell and down went I. Well I started on again and another one came and I went up in the air and lit in a nice soft shell hole. I left the old gun in the hole and started for the trench which I reached without further accidents and just as I got in another one buried me to the waist but I managed to get out of there and got down the trench a piece and stayed there all night. Then in the morning I tried to find my battalion but failed, but finally found one of the other battalions and reported to an officer who immediately sent me in his dressing station.

Pte. Sullivan went overseas with the 39th Battalion and afterwards transferred with another Canadian battalion at the front. He was officially reported missing last week. The telegram stating that he had been missing since September 26th. His letter written on October 2nd shows what happened to him.

Corp. W. H. Ryall who enlisted in Peterborough in February of last year with B Squadron 8th C.M.R. and went overseas with the Peterborough squadron is officially reported missing as a result of the recent fighting. Corp. Ryall came to Peterborough from Toronto where he had resided for a number of years. He originally came from England where his mother Mrs. E. Ryall resides in Devonshire. Corp. Ryall earned his promotion after going overseas, leaving Peterborough as a private.

SIGNALLER JOHN R. HERON.

Mrs. Alex Heron, 541 Gilmour street was notified this morning from Ottawa that her son Signaller Jack Heron, Canadian Field Artillery is officially reported admitted to No. 2 General Hospital, Harre, France on October 14th wounded in the left leg. Signaller Heron was one of five Peterborough boys who were sent to Kingston in the summer of 1915 by the 34th Field Battery to qualify as artillery sergeants. After qualifying Signaller Heron went overseas with the 34th Battery and went to the front as a signaller. The Examiner has published some very interesting letters from the young soldier, since he has been at the front. In a letter in yesterday's issue, Pte. G. I. Petty of Peterborough mentioned meeting Signaller Heron at the beginning of this month. He was then on his way up to the front line after being in the hospital. Signaller Heron was employed as a stenographer in the G.T.R. offices and was preparing himself for the Presbyterian ministry when he enlisted.

PTE. ALBERT W. TAMBLIN

Pte. Albert Tamblin who went overseas with the 93rd Battalion and afterwards went to the front with the first draft from the Peterborough Battalion to reinforce the Canadian Mounted Rifles is officially reported wounded, according to a wire from Ottawa received by his mother, Mrs. Agnes Tamblin, 56 Victoria Avenue this morning which states that Pte. Tamblin has been admitted to No. 2 General Hospital, Harre on October 14, suffering from contusion. Pte. Tamblin was born in Peterborough and is well known throughout the city. Two other brothers are overseas, one with the band of the 59th Battalion and the other with the 146th Battalion.

PTE. EDGAR ARMSON.

Pte. Edgar Armson, 585 Harvey street has been wounded in the recent fighting, his wife at the above address having received official news from Ottawa to the effect that Pte. Armson is reported admitted to No. 2 General Hospital, Rouen, France on Oct. 14, wounded in the right leg. Pte. Armson who was an employee of the Utilities Commission enlisted in Peterborough in August of last year, electing to go to Barriefield to join the 59th Battalion, instead of remaining here with the Peterborough Battalion. He went overseas with the 59th and was afterwards transferred to another Canadian battalion at the front. He is thirty-six years of age.

PTE. WM. MURPHY.

Mrs. Johanna Murphy, 491 Elm street received an official announcement from Ottawa this morning that her husband, Pte. Wm. A. Murphy of the Canadian Mounted Rifles and late of the 93rd Battalion is officially reported admitted to No. 2 General Hospital, Harre on October 14th, wounded in the knee. Pte. Murphy enlisted with the 93rd battalion here last winter and was a member of B company. He had previously tried to enlist with the 33rd Battery and had undergone an operation to fit himself for overseas service, coming out of hospital too late to join the battery. He then cast in his lot with the Peterborough Battalion and went overseas with Lt.-Col. Johnston's unit, going to France with the first draft from the 93rd. He is a gardener by trade and has lived in Peterborough for a long period.

Bandsman R. J. Morris of the 93rd Battalion band writes to Mr. and Mrs. W. Borland of Indian River as follows:

Dear Friends,—Just a few lines to let you know I am still living. I did not get over to France yet and I don't expect I will—hard luck. We played three hundred of our fellows away the other day, and I felt very sorry to see them go, but they all seemed to be happy. Jack, who worked with Will Leary has gone. I had quite a few chums with them. Harvey has been sick for quite a long time. To-day was the first time I was able to see him. He is looking O.K. but I don't think he will ever see the front.

We are having very nice weather over here—better than I expected.

How is everybody around old Indian River. I never felt better in all my life. I do nothing but play music all day.

SIR ROBERT BORDEN'S APPEAL TO CANADA

Last One Hundred Thousand Men That Canada Will Place in the Firing Line May Be the Deciding Factor in the War, Says Premier

AN EARNEST APPEAL

OTTAWA, Oct. 23.—Sir Robert Borden to-night issued the following appeal in behalf of National Service:

To the people of Canada: The world-wide struggle in which our Empire is fighting for its right, its liberties and its very existence, has continued for more than two years. Every effort that could honourably be made on our part to avert war was put forth with the deepest earnestness and sincerity. There was no escape from the contest save in dishonour and ultimate disaster. The wonderful extent and thoroughness of the enemy's long and careful preparation was imperfectly understood at first, and the magnitude of the struggle has surpassed all anticipation.

Great Britain's first expeditionary force has been increased more than twenty fold and that of Canada more than twelve fold. The climax of the war is rapidly approaching. The last hundred thousand men that Canada will place in the fighting line may be the deciding factor in a struggle the issues of which will determine the destiny of the Dominion, of our Empire, and of the whole world.

CANADA'S MANHOOD CHALLENGED.

The most eloquent tribute would fail to do fitting honour to the youth of Canada, who have already rallied so splendidly to the colours and whose heroic valour and glorious achievements have crowned this Dominion with imperishable distinction before the world. Remembering the sacrifice by which that distinction was won, we recall with solemn pride the undying memory of those who have fallen.

In the history of every people there may come such a challenge to spirit of its citizens as must be answered in service and devotion if the nation is to have an abiding place in the future. The events of this war bring that challenge to-day to the manhood of Canada.

Since the war began more than 370,000 men have enlisted in this Dominion. Two hundred and fifty-eight thousand have gone overseas, and more than 100,000 are now in the battle line. During the first 18 months of the present year, the number sent forward will aggregate 141,000. From January 1 to April 15, of this year, the enlistments were at the rate of nearly 1,000 per day. Up to the present, our forces have been enlisted and organized more rapidly than facilities of transportation and accommodation in Great Britain could be provided. During the past four months the number of enlistments has greatly decreased, and having regard to future needs the time has come for this appeal.

ENEMY STILL STRONG.

Notwithstanding the success of the allied fores in various theatres during the past summer, there is reason to know that the enemy is still strong and determined. A mightier effort than may be imagined is necessary to secure a conclusive victory. This war must have so decisive a result that lasting peace can be scured. We are fighting, not for truce, but for victory.

In all mechanical appliances which have played so great a part in this war the allied nations have almost, if not quite, overtaken the enemy's standard

PT. ED. PAYNE OF PETERBORO' IS KILLED IN ACTION

Letter From Commanding Officer of His Company This Afternoon Conveys the Sad News to His Parents

GUNNER PERRY HIT

Pte. Ed. Payne, who went overseas with the 59th Battalion, and afterwards went to France with a draft for the Canadian Mounted Rifles, was killed in action on Oct. 1st. The casualty has not been officially reported, but his mother, Mrs. Ed. Payne, 215 Carlisle avenue, received a letter this afternoon from the officer commanding his company, telling the tragic news.

Pte. Payne, who was only nineteen years of age, had lived in Peterborough eight years. He enlisted here in August of last year, going to Barriefield to join the 59th. He went overseas as a corporal, but threw up his stripes to go to France.

The tragic letter reads as follows:

France.

Dear Madam,—It is with deep regret that I am writing to you regarding the death of your son, who was killed in action during the operation of Oct. 1st, 1916. You will no doubt have been officially warned of the circumstances, but as his company commander I should like to convey to you my sincere sympathy for your loss. I should also like to tell you how nobly he fulfilled all of his duties in this last action and ever since he has joined my company. I feel his loss very much myself as do all his comrades for he has been one of the most popular men in the company.

He was given the best burial that time and circumstances could afford, and the remainder of his comrades join with me in expressing their sympathy for you and his relatives.

I am, madam,

Yours in sympathy,

C. R. Pearkes, Lieut.

O. C., C. Co.

DOING NOTHING.

Mayor Duffus touched the sore spot when he, as a member of a deputation, regarding the high cost of living, pointed out to the government that municipalities could do nothing effective, with out proper machinery and authority. The government has been interviewed and prodded in the hope of inducing it to take some action, such as it has power if it had the will to do. But instead of taking action it flies to the arms of its favourite way of avoiding action and evading responsibility — appoints a commission. Instead of striving from the shoulder, it gets behind the referee. It seems possible that the government by an simple an expedient as an order-in-council, might, if it will not act promptly itself, invest municipalities with some powers such as Mayor Duffus points the lack of; then something could be done and would be done. If the government has the power to check and control the causes that lead to the high cost of living and refuses to use it, is is responsible for adding gratuitously another burden to the general burden of a state of war.

OUR YANKEE COUSINS.

While officialdom in the United States has not taken the stand in this war, which, but for partisan considerations it might have taken, considering the interests involved—the interests that lay at the foundation of the integrity and strength of the Republic—it is satisfaction to note that the heart of the people is sound and beats in sympathy with a great cause. While the United States government has aimed to be strictly neutral, and has only too well kept to this object, with however a slight lisp, in fact, if not in intent, towards the enemy of liberty and right, yet the United States, through its people, has been a good friend to the cause of the allies. It has shown its sympathy in many ways and from high principle, The United States has been of almost incalculable, material help to the allied cause by the supplying of munitions, almost so much, perhaps, to partially to the allied cause as regard of profit to themselves. The people, however, have, from the beginning of the war, been nobly generous in contributing to the relief of the war suffering produced. This is recalled by a recent notable instance of the results of private philanthropy. The New York Herald has handed to the French ambassador in Washington a cheque for $40,266.80, the proceeds of an appeal instituted through the Herald for funds in the interests of hopelessly crippled French soldiers. When the elections are over and the necessity of catering to voters no longer exists, we may expect, even the government will be a little less lop-sided in its neutrality, in keeping with the evident mind and heart of the people, our good Yankee cousins.

SATISFACTORY BUT NOT ENOUGH SO.

The assurance is given by Sir Robt. Hill, British Minister of War Trade, that the British Government is perfectly satisfied with the precautions taken by the Canadian Government with regard to nickel. So far so good. While the Canadian Government is thus justified in respect of the precautions it has taken to protect Canadian nickel concerning the ore, it is still blameworthy from the fact that it was necessary to take such precautions.

The Government had adopted the right national policy, which it could have done years ago, of having Canadian nickel ores refined in Canada, there would have been no possibility of Canadian nickel getting into the hands of the Germans, the moment war was declared. Besides, it was, and is still, the duty of the Government to provide that Canadians should have the full and sole benefit of the profit of mining and refining Canadian nickel, as well as all other Canadian ores. We, that is, the Government permit the export of Canadian nickel matte to the United States to be refined. The value of the raw material we export, amounting to a few thousands, amounts to, perhaps, many millions by the process of refinement. All of this added value and profit is produced by the employment of labour, capital, and industrial operations. That added value—the lion's share—should be kept in Canada for the benefit of labour and industrial interests. Canada for the Canadians is an appeal the Government has not yet heeded, and is not adequately heeding to-day.

Canadians are making stupendous sacrifices enough—in manhood and money—to justify a demand that she should have the compensation of the full enjoyment of the benefits of home exploitation of her resources. Though Canadian nickel, according to Sir Robert Cecil, is not reaching Germany, yet the Canadian nickel is failing millions of dollars short of the home benefit we would receive if the Government had adopted, and put into practice, the true national policy of the home treatment and manufacture of our national resources. Divine Providence has made us trustees of a magnificent endowment of national resources, and we are false to our trust if we rob the people of our dollar of benefit the Canadian people were designed to gain from the custody of her natural raw material of wealth and power for good.

IMPROVE THE PRESENT.

Attention is recalled to a memorandum from Lt.-Col. W. R. Wilson, D.A.A., 3rd military district, printed in these columns on Saturday, enjoining all classes of the community to cooperate to the utmost in promoting recruiting. This memorandum is issued in view of reports received by the authorities that there is an impression that recruiting is not be pushed at present, in view of expected changes in connection with recruiting, whereas the work is to be pushed. It is desirable that the Third Military District maintain its reputation for being one of the best, if not the best, of the recruiting districts of the Dominion. It has enlisted a larger proportion of its numerical quota than any other. Up to the present this district has signed up 35,600 of its quota of 45,000, leaving 8,400 to be recruited to have this district contribute its full quota to the 500,000 to be enlisted in the Dominion.

There is need to see that there shall be no relaxation of recruiting effort. If recruiting is to be postponed till expected changes in recruiting methods are adopted, we shall, judging from the slowness of initial efforts, have to wait a long time, and much valuable time will be lost. It is held to be the intention that any change in organization for recruiting should not supersede, but rather, increase, its efficiency.

Meantime all who are interested in recruiting, and that includes everybody, should continue to act and strive as if no change or improvement in recruiting methods were contemplated. The present and former methods are not as effective as they might have been or might be, but this is all we have. Lack of authoritative interest and lack of systematic organization have been greatly felt.

If the government has at last decided to take an effective official interest in recruiting, it is to be hoped that it will act with the greatest promptitude. Meanwhile we must do the best we can with the recruiting machinery now available. The call is to the Speakers' Patriotic League and all citizens to do the best that they can do to stimulate the sense of duty of those eligible for recruiting, and bring them to the point of action. If we are to win this war we must continue to give our help. It should be impressed upon Canadians who are fit for service, that they are called upon to fight for themselves and their homes. If an enemy were at our borders, ready to invade Canada, there would be no hesitation. As a matter of fact, the enemy is on our frontier but this frontier is not now along the St. Lawrence, but across the seas in France and Flanders. The enemy is assailing our borders, attacking our homes, for its assault is upon the liberties, the rights that are all that make our homes real homes—something worth fighting for.

Decline of Spiritual Life in the Church

Peterborough, Oct. 21 1916.

The birth of Christ inaugurates a new stage of things. The way had been prepared by John the Baptist, and after introducing Christ at his baptism to the nation that he came to save he disappears after his work is done and seals his testimony with the blood of the Master did afterwards. Large numbers had been converted by the preaching of John and Jesus immediately begins to preach the same gospel, with the same words that John used 'Repent ye for the kingdom of heaven is at hand' and Jesus went about all Galilee teaching in their synagogues and preaching the gospel of the kingdom and healing all manner of sickness and all manner of disease among the people, and he continued this work until he laid down his life to save a lost world and arose from the dead triumphant over death and hell and ascended from the Mount of Olives up into heaven to the right hand of the Father, but he will come again in the clouds of heaven and the holy angels with him, but his mission to earth was accomplished and a lost world was redeemed by his precious blood, and while here he shed a halo of glory wherever he went, and shed a light that was never seen by mortal eye on land or sea, his teachings and example has thrilled the souls of the noblest of earth's sons. His sermon on the mount contains the grandest thoughts that were ever uttered and if we had no other of his teachings we would have all that we would require to guide us all the way from earth to heaven, and we would add the tribute of the beloved disciple, John, who said if all the things which Jesus did, the which if they should be written, every one it would take many books to contain them. His command to go and preach the gospel to all nations was nobly taken up by his disciples and their followers, men who counted their lives not dear unto them, but went out boldly and preached Jesus and him crucified, the brave and impetuous Peter at Pentecost carried the banner of the cross and under the power of the holy spirit and the earnest words of the Galilean fisherman, 3,000 souls were converted and the work went on and many others were added to the church daily such as should be saved, wonders and signs were wrought and those that believed distributed to the poor brethren of their means as they saw they had need, so that there were none in want—they were of one mind and one accord daily in the temple, praising God, they gained favour with the people—you will observe that it was the Lord that added to the church such as should be saved. No wonder that they were all happy, true religion makes everyone happy that enjoys it. The Rev. E. Hammond used to sing a hymn very appropriate to the happy Christian, as follows:

A pilgrim and a stranger here,
Happy, happy, happy,
I seek a home to pilgrims dear,
Happy in the Lord.

We'll cross the river of Jordan,
Happy, happy, happy,
Cross the river of Jordan
Happy in the Lord.

We how pass on to Saul of Tarsus, a Pharisee brought up at the feet of Gamaliel, a doctor of Jewish laws, and educated at the College of Tarsus. We find him persecuting the church of God and hailing men and women to prison and giving his testimony against them to cause them to be stoned to death. The light of the glorious gospel of the Son of God had begun to shine and many of the people had become followers of the lowly Nazarene, even amongst the rich and learned, man had embraced the true faith, but as the gospel lamp shone brighter and brighter, persecution began. Light and darkness, good and evil cannot live together. Wherever light shines in darkness the gloom is dispersed but the gods of evil in the human heart will grow unless the grace of God roots them up. Saul continued breathing out threatenings and slaughter against the church of God and false witnesses were summoned to testify against them. Amongst those arrested was Stephen one of the deacons a man full of faith and of the Holy Ghost, who made a noble defence, and whose face shone as an angel and had a vision of Christ standin at the right hand of God, and kneeling down prayed for his enemies. Whilst stoning him to death, he cried, Lord lay not this sin to their charge, then fell asleep and Saul was consenting to his death. A vote had been taken by the Sanhedrim and Saul gave his vote for the death sentence to be carried out, and the clothes of the young men that stoned Stephen were laid at the feet of Saul. It has been said by Bible expositors that Saul never forgot the martyrdom of Stephen and that an impression had been made on him which he afterwards referred to, yet he continued on his wicked course. The devil delights to tempt and try the children of God just as he did Job. Saul got more bitter against the servants of Christ. He went to the High Priest and obtained authority to arrest anyone found calling on the name of the Lord. He also received an escort of armed horsemen to assist him. He set out on his mission of evil, but man proposes and God disposes, and on the way to Damascus suddenly a bright light from heaven shone bright about him and he fell to the earth and he heard his name repeated twice, saying, Saul, Saul, why persecute thou me, and Jesus revealed himself saying, I am Jesus whom thou persecutest, and he asked the question, what wilt thou have me to do and the brave official of the High Priest who left Jerusalem in pomp and pride, was led by the hand blind into the city of Damascus. Then the Lord sent his servant Annanias to comfort him. He received his sight, was baptized and straightway he preached Christ in the synagogues and confounded the Jews, proving that this is the very Christ, and they went about to kill him but when Jesus calls and chooses, nothing can harm, they are safe in his keeping. Paul was a chosen vessel to carry the gospel to the Gentiles. In my next we will try to show he laboured in his Master's service.

Yours sincerely,
James Sutherland,

PROVIDE THE CENSORSHIP WITH SOME COMMON SENSE.

There have been many complaints in the press about the vagueness of the official eye-witness reports of Canadian activities at the front. Pleas have been made for more detailed information. Hitherto, The Free Press has trusted largely to the wisdom of those in charge of military matters. We have hesitated to criticise about matters on which we could not have knowledge possessed by those directly dealing with them.

In a recent issue, the Toronto Star, however, makes what seems to us a reasonable plea for fuller information. It points out that when casualty list are published, no mention is made of the battalions, with which those whose names appear in the list were fighting or the engagements in which they fell. This, in the Star's opinion, is an unnecessary suppression of information.

In support of its argument the Toronto paper mentions the fact that there is not this suppression of information in the Old Country, the names of regiments engaged in certain operations being published by the authorities. For instance, the official press bureau announced this week that certain regiments, including the London regiments, the Royal Irish the Duke of Wellington's, the Grenadier Guards, the Northumberlands the Gordon Highlanders, the Dublin Fusiliers, the Coldstream Guards, and others were chiefly engaged in a certain offensive operation.

In the Canadian militia authorities in Canada or overseas have authority in the matter of information to be published, why should they exercise a greater censorship than that enforced by the Imperial authorities? If the Canadian authorities do not rule in this matter, can they not secure the same treatment for Canadian despatches as is given reports relating to the Old Country forces?

We realize that there is certain information that it would be unwise to give out. The other day an unnamed Canadian flier was decorated for distinguished service. Again newspapers have demanded the name of a certain gallant Canadian corporal whose work was referred to by the Equimimeau. The withholding of those names was probably a wise precaution on the part of the militia authorities. Should the men fall into the hands of the enemy later it might go hard with them if the Germans knew that they had accomplished certain important successes against their forces. The British merchant skipper, Captain Fryatt, was put to death in Germany through the Prussian blood-thirsty desire to punish him for having sunk one of their submarines on a previous voyage. But for the publication in British papers of stories relating to Captain Fryatt's exploit, the Germans would probably not have identified him, and he would not have lost his life. Common sense and reason could advantageously be applied to the censorship.—Ottawa Free Press.

Disbursments of the Local Branch, During the Year, Amounted to Over $17,000---What is Being Done Locally to Alleviate Sufferings of Wounded Soldiers on Battlefields of Europe---A Splendid Work That is Being Carried on by a Noble Band of Self-Sacrificing Women---Mrs. T. F. Matthews Will Succeed Mrs. J. C. Davidson as President of the Local Branch.

THE AUXILIARY ORGANIZATIONS

A Few Facts Concerning the Work of the Local Branch of the Canadian Red Cross Society

The fiscal year of the Peterborough Branch of the Red Cross Society came to a close October 19th, 1916. During the year the disbursements of the local branch amounted to about $17,000.

Twenty-five meetings have been held during the year for the transaction of business.

The local branch of the society is made up of over nine hundred members.

During the year two lectures were delivered under the auspices of the local branch; one by Surgeon-General Stirling Ryerson, and the other by Professor Stephen Leacock, the well-known Canadian humourist.

Articles to the number of four hundred and nineteen thousand, four hundred and eighty-two were prepared by the local branch during the year just closed. These were made during the eight months the workrooms were open.

Two thousand two hundred pairs of socks were made by the knitters of the local branch during the year.

Food packages and clothing are sent bi-monthly to Peterborough prisoners of war, many of whom are adopted by individual members.

A short time ago, rubber goods to the value of five hundred dollars were purchased by the local branch and forwarded to five needy hospitals.

Supplies used by the parent branch of the Peterborough Red Cross Society and auxiliary branches are purchased from or through local merchants whenever possible.

The retiring President, Mrs. J. C. Davidson, is leaving the city for a short time to reside in Toronto.

The books of the society are audited by a competent accountant and none of the supplies entrusted to the society are sold without the knowledge or consent of the society.

The receipts of the Peterborough Red Cross Society for the year ending October 19th, amounted to $17,259.04. Of this amount the sum of $11,542.10 was received from monthly subscribers.

Few patriotic societies experience as little difficulty in collecting subscribed amounts as the Red Cross Society.

The Peterborough Branch of the Red Cross Society is indebted to a number of auxiliary branches and societies both in the city and county for able and material assistance.

The auxiliary organizations perform a very necessary and useful work in that they do all the machine sewing and such work as the members are unable to do in their rooms at the Public Library.

On Monday night next Mrs. Adelaide Plumptre, of Toronto, Secretary of the Canadian Red Cross Society, will address a meeting in the Peterborough Collegiate Institute.

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE LOCAL BRANCH.

From the shell-torn battlefields of Europe to the workrooms of the Peterborough Branch of the Canadian Red Cross Society is a far cry, yet the two bear a significant relation to each other that cannot be adequately expressed in mere geographical terms. For one thing the setting is strangely different. Out amid the noise of shot and shell stands the defender of the Empire. To him the Red Cross may appear as a mere incidental until some day he is carried off the field in a stretcher, then the organization of which he has seen and heard so much takes on a real practical meaning. The society's ministrations do not end with the mere dressing of the wound. Every comfort necessary to the welfare of the soldier is available, and it is just such service which has made possible a minimum reduction in the fearful wastage that characterizes the present war as all other wars and the return of a large percentage of men to the front who otherwise would have been totally incapacitated. It is just such work that has necessitated the creation of the Peterborough Red Cross Society with its auxiliary branches in both city and country. Few people but what are more or less familiar with the work of this institution and the indispensible relation it bears to the grim struggle that is being waged overseas. The appended reports covering the year's work of the local branch only serve to remind and figuratively portray the noble work that is being enacted day by day within the confines of the society's workrooms in the Public Library. These reports were presented at the annual meeting that was held yesterday afternoon, and which among other things, included the election of the following officers:—

ELECTION OF OFFICERS.

The following officers were elected for the year:—Hon.-President, Mrs. G. W. Roger; President, Mrs. T. F. Matthews; Hon. Vice President, Mrs. J. C. Davidson; 1st Vice President, Mrs. John Allan; 2nd Vice President, Mrs. J. A. Aylmer; Secretary, Miss Laura Davidson; Treasurer, Miss E. Morrow. The Executive Committee comprises the following:—Mrs. R. Waddell, Mrs. Scott, Mrs. Richard Hall, Mrs. James Wood, Mrs. W. H. Hill, Mrs. R. Deane Mrs. E. M. Munro. Convenors of Standing Committees are as follows:—Supplies, Miss M. Rush; Knitting machine, Mrs. Dunsford; Knitting, Miss Burnett; Membership, Mrs. Reg Turner; Packing, Miss Flora Davidson; Literature, Miss Williams.

The meeting opened with prayer, the minutes of the last annual meeting and an address by Mrs. J. C. Davidson in her capacity of President of the society.

THE PRESIDENT'S ADDRESS

The address contained the following:—

Another year of faithful effort has gone and this branch of the Canadian Red Cross Society, as you will see by the various reports, has nothing of which to be ashamed. Yet there is room for redoubled efforts in the future.

It was a happy inspiration of the Executive when they decided to appoint an advisory board, and very splendid and hard work these men have done. Their work has been faithfully and ably backed up by the members of the executive, who have collected the subscriptions each month throughout the year.

The contributors, too, are to be congratulated on their generous and ready response when the collectors have called. We have missed much from the executive meetings the active co-operation of Miss Peacock, and later Mrs. Allin, both of whom were amongst our first members and most active, energetic and enthusiastic workers.

From the Advisory Board we have lost the enthusiastic chairman, and also the secretary, but we hope others may be found who will carry on the work of the Board.

Too much cannot be said in praise of the faithful work done by the Supervisors and Assistants of the Work Room. I know they do not want thanks, but their faithfulness and hard work during the time that the work room was open, was most conspicuous and we cannot let it go entirely unnoticed.

Very few people realise the time and the ability that has been given by our supervisor of supplies. Indeed, a great part of the work accomplished has been owing to her untiring zeal and energy.

The Knitting Committee, too, have been most faithful, as also the packers. They alone of the committees have gone on without any summer holiday.

It will rest with the new executive to carry on the work as long as it may be necessary (and may it not be for many months longer.)

This work like all other is constantly changing, and because we are not asked for the same kind of work which we were a year ago is no reason for stopping altogether. Now is the chance to "carry on" and our faithful auxiliaries now have their chance to do the work that is most needed. It is to be hoped that they will gather in more and more of those workers who for some time only worked in the work room. We ought not to pick and choose our work any more than our brave soldiers, who are "under orders" can choose to do as they please. Let each one do willingly and well what we are asked to do by those who are in authority and whose business it is to know what work is most needed. Socks and more socks, pyjamas, and shirts, dressing gowns, nurses' aprons, sheets, towels towels, etc.,—these are only some of the requirements, and surely all these things are what all womanly women delight in being able to make. And our auxiliaries are the ones who have it in their power to do this work well.

Before closing may I say publicly what I have already said, how much I appreciate the help and fellowship of the officers and the executive. I cannot say how deeply I regret having to resign as the president of this branch. Let us hope and pray that in the near future, and in brighter times we may all work together again for a happier if not a greater cause.

F. M. DAVIDSON.

THE SECRETARY'S REPORT

Miss Laura Davidson the very efficient Secretary of the local branch of the Red Cross Society presented the following report.

Madam President and members of the Red Cross Society:—

In presenting the Second Annual report, that Executive of the Peterborough Branch of the Canadian Red Cross Society desires first of all to record its gratitude and thanks to the citizens of Peterborough for their generous financial support, that through the means placed at their disposal, the lives of wounded men who have gone forth to war might be saved and their sufferings alleviated.

Since the annual meeting held in October 1915, there have been few changes in the personnel or work of the Peterborough Branch, except the very necessary and desirable one of growth.

Twenty-five meetings for the transaction of business have been held, ten open meetings, thirteen executive, and two joint meetings of the Advisory Board and the Executive. These meetings have all been well attended, and the committee have worked conscientiously to further the work to the best of their ability.

There are at the present time 86 life members, 367 annual members and 36 associate members and 482 members of the Peterborough Branch of the Canadian Red Cross Society.

A public meeting to stimulate the work of the Red Cross was held in October, 1915, in the Lecture Hall of the Collegiate Institute. The meeting was addressed by Surgeon General G. Stirling Ryerson. His subject being "What war means".

In February a most interesting lecture was delivered by Professor Stephen Leacock of McGill University, Montreal, the proceeds of which were divided between the Red Cross and the Belgian Relief Funds.

The Society's operations for the year may be classified under four divisions:—

NO. 1.
THE SURGICAL SUPPLIES

Made in the work room at the Public Library, a very important phase of the work last year:

16856 Large Pads.
17401 Medium Pads.
26844 Small Pads.
71369 Compresses.
267178 Sponges making a total of 419482 articles.

These were made during the eight months that the room was open. Acting under advice from Headquarters the making of these supplies was discontinued in June and the work room closed.

We realize that this has been a great disappointment to the many workers engaged in this particular department, but we would urge all to assist the Auxiliaries in the most necessary work with which they are called upon to do again this year.

No. 2.
THE GENERAL HOSPITAL SUPPLIES

These are made by the Auxiliaries Societies Committees and Individuals throughout the city and country. The Packing Committee reports 36,144 Articles shipped.

1000 Night shirts
5948 Towels.
9941 Handkerchiefs.
4000 Mouth Wipes.
4791 Many Tailed Bandages.
386 Tri-Angular Bandages.
2515 Rolled Bandages.
279—Jaw Bandages.
113 Bed Jackets.
380 Suits Pyjamas.
30 Pair Bed Socks.
70 Operation Sacks.
130 Personnel Property Bags.
146 Hot Water Bottle Covers.
2 Quilts.
477 Day Shirts.
83 Dressing Gowns.
208 Gauze Vests.
796 Sheets.
854 Pillow Cases.
14 Feather Pillows.
145 Ring Pillows.
56 Kit Bags Filled.
1404 Wash Cloths.
100 Comfort Bags Filled.
2 Scarfs.
5 Pairs of Wristlets.
5 Pairs Bed Shoes.
28 News From Home.
2 Cases old Linen.

Chiclets, soap and adhesive plaster, 17,000 yards Gauze, 200 pounds cotton.

No. 3.
THE KNITTING

The thanks of the Society are due this Committee for their excellent work so faithfully done throughout the whole year. 2,200 pairs of socks were made. In addition to the socks knit by individuals, the Knitting Machine Committee are now making about 30 pairs of socks a week.

No. 4.
THE PRISONERS OF WAR

This great Branch of the Society under the management of Mrs. Rivers Bulkley was organized in England and the Society forwards regular aid to our unfortunate men in the German prison camps. Food packages and clothing are sent bi-monthly to our Peterborough Prisoners of War, many of whom are adopted by individual members. Cards of acknowledgment and appreciative notes have been received from some of those receiving parcels. The number of Peterborough prisoners is 41—but in addition to these the Society sends money for other Prisoners.

In response to a special request from a returned physician who had worked under the Red Cross on the Eastern and Western fronts a consignment of Rubber Goods valued at $500.00 has been purchased by the Local Society and will be forwarded to five needy hospitals in the near future.

It was not thought advisable to send jam overseas this year, the General Society having bought the season's output of fruit from the Jordan Harbor Peach Ranch Co., Niagara. A cash contribution towards this purchase was made instead.

It will be of interest to the contributors of this Society to know that the materials for the above mentioned supplies have almost all been purchased through the local merchants.

This work has not grown of itself. It is the result of long months of labour. It is the self-sacrificing work of many women and girls who have given of their strength and time liberally and gladly, not looking for reward or recognition, but rewarded to the full in the thought and knowledge that they are not helping one but many of the brave boys who are giving their lives that we may live.

Before closing the Executive would like to place on record their appreciation of help from the following sources, without the effective co-operation of these bodies the supplies sent would have been very much less.

The Auxiliaries, Societies and Committees throughout the city and surrounding country; the Advisory Board; The Press, always willing to help; The Board of Officers of the Public Library; The Dominion Express Company and the Fanning Laundry who have done all our shipping and Laundry free, which represents a great and increasing donation. The Pioneers of the 93rd Battalion, Mr. Mullen Clements; Mr. Patterson who has since gone overseas, Mr. G. A. Smith, Mr. Grieve and Norman Foote who have assisted the packing committee, Mr. Wand and Mr. Harry Hutchison and the great body of workers, organized and unorganized who have assisted in this work, and who are still helping to help us carry it on, as long as there is necessity.

Surely there is no need of any further incentive to work while the war lasts. It should be an inspiration to know that we are not only helping our own soldiers, but also those of our brave Allies.

It is with regret that the Society records the death of one of its faithful workers, Miss Jessie Hamilton, a member of the Knitting Committee.

The Executive begs to extend its sincere sympathy to the family.

We cannot close this report without referring to the work of our retiring President, Mrs. Davidson, whose services and interest in this Society since its inception has contributed so much to its success.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

LAURA J. DAVIDSON,
Honourary Secretary.

Dated at Peterborough this 23rd day of October, 1916.

The members of the South End Branch of the Red Cross Society wish to present the following report for the year ending August 2, 1916. REPORT OF "TRINITY" CHURCH RED CROSS AUXILIARY.

The Sewing Circle of Trinity Church is possibly the youngest child of the Peterboro Red Cross family—having only commenced its activities on Feb. 17th last.

And just here may we thank the Mother Society for the kindness and courtesy which they have continually received from her hands.

The officers re-elected for the year were:

Pres.—Mrs. Robt. Neill.
Sec.—Mrs. Thos. Cruikshank.
Treas—Miss Georgia Walsh, (lately succeeded by Miss Watt.)
Supervisors — Mesdames. Jackson, Howard, Walsh, Johnson, Hawley, Clegg, and Watt, and Miss Cornell.

The following articles have been forwarded to the packing rooms:

1019 handkerchiefs, 3 pairs slippers, 4 hot water bottle covers, 871 many tailed bandages, 15 pairs socks, 59 sets of pyjamas, 128 pillow cases, 11 dressing gowns, 458 shirts, 23 comfort bags, 91 night shirts, 170 day shirts, 206 Turkish towels, 1415 linen towels.

The young ladies of the congregation conducted a tea room in connection with the Sewing Circle, thus netting in May a sum sufficient to send boxes to the "Trinity" boys overseas.

At present Christmas boxes are being packed for the boys, who now number 48; the funds for which we are indebted to the Quarterly Board of the church.

It has been with a strangely sad fascination that the women have worked and they propose continuing their "bit" in the present terrific struggle, having learned as never before the strength of duty and the beauty of service, and these have given life added meaning.

T. DAISY CRUIKSHANK,
Secretary.

LILY LAKE RED CROSS AUXILIARY.

The following is a statement of the supplies sent to Peterboro from Lily Lake Red Cross Auxiliary, opening on Nov., 1915, and closing June, 1916, for summer months:

43 pair of socks.
56 pillow covers.
43 suits pyjamas.
39 sheets.
194 Towels.
20 hospital handkerchiefs.
108 many tailed bandages.
10 hot water bottle covers.

The total receipts for the term were $129.80; total expenditures for the term, $111.21, leaving a balance on hand of $18.68.

Pres.—Mrs. W. Oliver.
Vice-President—Mrs. T. McMullen.
Secretary—Mrs. D. Mahood.
Treasurer—Miss M. Swinton.

OTHER AUXILIARIES

Among the Auxiliary organizations that assisted in the work are the following:—

Bereau Bible Class, Church Women's Association of St. John's church, Church Girls Association of St. John's church, St. Peter's T.A.S., Little Beavers, Thursday Club, Teacher's Guild, Otonabee Chapter, I.O.D.E., Women's Patriotic League of Ashburnham, Kitchener Red Cross Club, Business Girls Club, Progressive Club, Peter Robinson Chapter I.O.D.E., C. L. A. of Trinity Methodist Church, King's Daughters.

Many of the auxiliary organizations do not provide supplies, but perform such work as making garments and other articles required by the Red Cross Society. In such cases the supplies are provided by the local branch of the Red Cross Society.

Other organizations provide their own supplies. It was pointed out at the meeting that while some articles such as certain forms of dressings were at present not required by the Society, there remained plenty of work that was equally as important. The auxiliary organizations perform an important service in that they do the machine sewing and such operations as cannot conveniently be performed in the workrooms at the Public Library. A letter from A. David, a prisoner of war, acknowledging receipt of a parcel sent by the Society was read at the meeting.

Mrs. J. C. Davidson expressed regret at having to sever her connection with the local branch of the Red Cross Society, owing to her pending departure from the city. She expressed appreciation of the support received during her time of office. The meeting closed with the singing of the national anthem.

Eastern C. P. R. Trainmen Will Strike

With Their Brethern in West

Examiner Special:

TORONTO, Oct. 24.—If the conductors, trainmen and yardmen on the western lines of the C.P.R. strike to-morrow night, a Toronto C.P.R. conductor stated to the Star to-day, that the men on the eastern section would walk out in sympathy with their brother members in the West. This would precipitate a strike on the C. P. R. from coast to coast.

In corroboration of this it is known that the officers of the Brotherhood on eastern lines have sealed orders in their possession from the Grand Lodge officers in Winnipeg, in relation to the action the men are to take to-morrow night. These orders are to be opened at the expiration of the time set for the C.P.R. to come to terms in Winnipeg at the conference of the leaders of the Brotherhoods.

CALL OF REV. G. A. BROWN SUSTAINED

The call of the congregation of the Presbyterian church, Barrie, to Rev. George A. Brown, of Campbellford, was sustained at the meeting of the Presbytery at St. Paul's to-day.

REV. W. L. TRENCH DIES OF BLOOD POISONING

RICHMOND HILL, Oct. 23.—Rev. W. L. Trench died at Hilldale parsonage from blood-poisoning contracted only a few days ago. He had been at a funeral, and a day or so later symptoms of blood poisoning developed, and although everything possible was done for him he passed away.

The poison first showed itself in his hand. Rev. Mr. Trench had been at Hillsdale two years and was formerly on the Richmond Hill circuit, and assistant to Rev. J. C. Speer at a West Toronto church. He was a graduate of the University of Toronto and Victoria College. His father was the late Wm. Trench, who conducted the waggon works here, the business now being carried on by Thomas Trench.

Rev. Mr. Trench was in his thirty-ninth year, and leaves his widow and one child.

SERVICE AT BETHEL CHURCH

A splendid and appreciative crowd gathered at Bethel, near Warsaw, last night, to see scenes from the war zone, together with some slides of local men enlisted, largely with the 83rd Batt.

Adjt. McElheney conducted the service and talked a few minutes on behalf of the 236th Battalion.

Sugar Advanced-- Then Was Cancelled

At 9 o'clock Saturday morning all Canadian refined sugar was advanced 25 cents and at noon on Saturday the advance was cancelled and prices went back to the levels that were established on Thursday. In the opinion of wholesalers the advance was justified, as it would just put sugar prices in line with the market. The raw sugars are higher in proportion than are the refined and the former are very firm. It would not come as a surprise if the 25 cents advance were put into effect this week.

BABY PLAGUE IN GOTHAM LEAVES 5,137 CRIPPLES

NEW YORK, Oct. 23.—Four motor busses, each capable of holding twenty children, are now engaged in transporting the crippled victims of infantile paralysis from their homes to dispensaries, where they are treated and back again.

But Dr. Donald E. Baxter, director of the After Care Society, says this is a mere drop in the bucket. There are 5,137 children in New York deformed by last summer's epidemic.

The parents of some can afford to pay for treatment, but Dr. Baxter thinks that more than 3,000 will require free treatment, and as the braces the little ones must wear are heavy it is impossible for the mothers to carry them to the dispensaries.

Miss Sara Graham-Mulhall, chairman of the committee on transportation, estimates that $800 a day will be required to meet the expenses of the busses. Up to the present $2,239 has been received by Mrs. J. Clifton Edgar, treasurer, who has headquarters at 289 Fourth avenue with the after care committees. Mrs. Philip Lydig heads the list of contributions with $400.

Miss Graham-Mulhall announced that several groups of women organized to furnish motor vehicles for the paralytics had agreed to unite, and with this co-operation she hopes great results may be attained.

"It will require constant care for some years," she said, "if these children are to be saved from becoming lifelong cripples, burdens on themselves and on society."

The CRESSMAN Company Limited

NORTHUMBERLAND AND DURHAM ARE INDIGNANT

Resolutions Passed at a Red Hot Citizens' Meeting in Cobourg Over Removal of 235th Battalion—"Grossest Kind of Breach of Faith"

COBOURG, Oct. 23.— The Counties of Northumberland and Durham are complaining bitterly because the 235th Battalion is not to go into winter quarters at home, but has been sent to Belleville.

A largely attended meeting of citizens of Cobourg was held on Friday night, when resolutions were passed strongly condemning the action of the authorities and alleging breach of faith.

The 235th was authorized last spring under Col. Scobell, who has been attached to several battalions since the war broke out. The battalion now has a strength of only about 500, but it was estimated that now that the slack season is coming on there should be no difficulty of completing the battalion during the winter months in the Counties of Northumberland and Durham.

The battalion has just completed a trek through the counties, and in every town they visited made certain arrangements for quartering troops, or part of them, there. Bowmanville, where they had their headquarters, has made quite extensive preparations; Port Hope has available the accommodation they had last winter for the 136th Battalion, and Cobourg has an Armory completely equipped with bunks, etc., where the 39th spent last winter. Campbellford, Colborne, and Brighton had all been asked to make preparations and had done so.

Now the whole battalion has been moved to Belleville. On whose instructions no person knows.

Northumberland and Durham citizens want to find the nigger in the woodpile. Whether it is that Hastings County is considered a better field in which to recruit the 235 to strength, or whether it is that more promises in the counties of Northumberland and Durham had been made that could be filled, is not known.

The resolutions passed by the Cobourg citizens' meeting on Friday night pointed out that there is ample accommodation in the counties of Northumberland and Durham, that undoubtedly promises have been made that the 235th would be wintered in the counties, that the officers publicly and privately promised that the battalion would stay at the point of enlistment until mobilized for overseas, that the removal of the battalion would bring recruiting to standstill, and concludes by protesting that the removal of the unit is the grossest kind of breach of faith, detrimental to the best interests of the battalion itself and fatal to the work of recruiting.

Prominent Millbrook Man Is Dead

Death Occurred Yesterday Afternoon of William James Fisher — Was Identified With the Township Council

MILLBROOK, Oct. 26.—There passed away yesterday afternoon one of Millbrook's most respected citizens in the person of William James Fisher. Deceased was born in South Monaghan. He resided in Cavan Township for many years and was a member of Cavan Council for several years and also Reeve of the Township for a term.

He was a member of Millbrook Council last year.

His wife predeceased him by a few months. Her death caused him much grief and this added to his own ill-health, no doubt helped to shorten his life. He has one son in the army, and two daughters, Mrs. (Rev.) Matheson of Brantford and Miss Fisher at home.

The funeral takes place from the family residence Anne street, Millbrook on Wednesday, October 25th at 3 o'clock. Interment will take place at the Presbyterian cemetery, Millbrook. Service will be held at the house at 2.30.

St. Paul's Choir Were Entertained

A delightful evening was spent last night by the members of St. Paul's choir and their friends, at the home of the organist, Mr. John Allan.

The gathering was a kitchen shower in honour of Miss Gladys Duncan, a very faithful member of the choir, and Mr. Howard Quinn, who are to be married in a few days.

After games, all the choir members went upstairs and got some kitchen utensil, in fact so numerous were the articles that some carried several.

Led by Mr. Allan, the choir marched down stairs singing a popular chorus, through the hall and rooms until the happy couple were surrounded by a big circle of their friends. Then each one read the amusing and witty verse attached to the gift until all had been presented.

After the singing of "For they are Jolly Good Fellows," short speeches were made by Mr. Allan, Rev. Mr. Pogue, Sheriff Hall, Messrs. Logan, Moore, Madill, Nelson, Sollitt, McKeown and Steer, in which every good wish was expressed for Miss Duncan's and Mr. Quinn's future happiness. Mr. Quinn replied in happy terms on Miss Duncan's behalf. After refreshments had been served the bright gathering broke up about midnight.

Never in all that is known of the fur business has there been such a tremendous vogue for furs.

SITUATION IS IMPROVING

Special to The Examiner:

OTTAWA, Oct. 24.—Hon. T. W. Crothers stated this morning that he had received a message from Winnipeg, indicating that the C. P. R. strike situation was improving, and he is hopeful that a basis of agreement may be arrived at within the next twenty-four hours.

Winnipeg, Oct. 24.—Baron Shaughnessy, President of the C.P.R., is now working personally on the trainmen's dispute and it is hoped here that he will make concessions to the men before permitting the strike, which is called for at 5 o'clock tomorrow, all over Canada, from coast to coast. In many ways the men are in a position to force the Company's hand, owing to the immense traffic of Canadian Pacific at present. Leaders of the men say that they will not recede one fraction in their demands.

"AT HOME" WAS GREAT SUCCESS

The "At Home" under the auspices of the St. Peter's Patriotic Club in St. Alphonsus Lyceum last night was a most successful and enjoyable event. There was a big crowd in attendance. Prizes donated by Messrs. Herb Hickey and T. J. Collins were won by Mrs. John Malone, East City and Mr. John Trombley. The proceeds will be used for furnishing Christmas boxes for the boys at the front.

MR. DOBBIN GAVE ADDRESS

There was a large attendance at George Street Church Epworth League meeting, last evening, to hear Mr. F. H. Dobbin give some incidents of his recent trip to Quebec Province and also his impression of the country and its people. The meeting was in charge of the Christian Citizenship Department.

Next Monday night there will be a Hallowe'en party under the direction of the Missionary Department of the League, and on the following Monday evening, November 6, a reception will be held for all students attending the Normal School.

Cavan Township Ploughing Match

CAVAN, Oct. 24.—The plowing match on Monday at the farm of Mr. Johnston, Cavan was largely attended and much interest was shown in the different events. A Millbrook Editor carried off a box of cigars, having won one of the events. He seems to have beaten some "old timers" too. Among the contestants in this event were Preachers, tailor, banker, hardware merchants, etc. This is an instance where the "press" was mightier than the "pulpit". Mr. D. McCamus was also a winner in one of the events.

Sir Robert Borden's Appeal

of preparation; Therefore, the result will depend upon the organization of the man-power of the allied nations. Canada must be streng and resolute in that great endeavour.

Our strength can be most effctively thrown into this conflict by utilizing, in all our national activities for sustaining the agricultural, industrial and commercial stability of Canada, those who, through age or by reason of physical condition, are not available for service at the front, t and that we may place in the battle line the greatest possible proportion of those fit for military service. With this view the Government has asked the Director-General and the directors of National Service to undertake duties of the highest importance and urgency. It is imperative that the men and women of Canada individually and through their various organizations, shall serve the nation in these capacities in which their service may be of the most value. Thus, it is the urgent duty of the Canadian people to join with the Government in organizing the full power of the nation in terms of human energy.

AN EARNEST APPEAL.

Under the responsibilities with which I am invested and in the name of the State, which we are all bound to serve, it is my duty to appeal, and I do now appeal most earnestly, to the people of Canada that they assist and co-operate with the Government and the Directors of National Service in the endeavour for this purpose. To men of military age I make the appeal that they place themselves at the service of the State for military duty. To all others I make appeal that they place themselves freely at the disposition of their country for such service as they are deemed best fitted to perform.

And to the women of Canada, whose spirit has been so splendid and so inspiring in this hour of devotion and sacrifice, I bid Godspeed in the manifold works of beneficence in which they are now engaged and I pray them to aid still more in every field of national service for which they may feel themselves fitted.

Let us never forget the solemn truth that the nation is not constituted of the living alone. There are those as well who have passed away and those yet to be born. So this great responsibility comes to us as heirs of the past and trustees of the future.

But with that responsibility there has come something greater still, the opportunity of proving ourselves worthy of it. And I pray that this may not be lost.

"When Dreams Come True"

One of the brightest and snappiest musical comedies that will be seen here this year will be presented at the Grand Opera House next Saturday, Oct. 28th. Matinee and night, when Coutts and Tennis present their universal success, "When Dreams Come True."

This fascinating musical comedy of romance and youth is staged in three acts with twenty-five tuneful song hits from the pen of Silvio Hein, who is responsible for many of Marie Cahill's greatest successes.

The play tells of the adventures of a wealthy young New Yorker's spry young offspring, who becomes involved with one of the dancers at a popular music hall in Paris. His allowance being cut off by his angry parents on account of this escapade, he is compelled to return home in the steerage. In the first cabin there is a young woman he falls in love with at first sight, but, of course, finds it impossible to meet her until both arrive in New York. At this point a smuggling plot makes its appearance, in which both the young man and his fair charmer become immediately involved, and from which many amusing complications ensue.

SELF-DEFENCE IS IS WONDERFUL PICTURE

Thousands of Canadian Troops, Shown in Remarkable Moving Picture at the Grand—No Citizen of Peterboro Should Miss the Opportunity To-night or To-morrow

"Self Defence," the Canadian-built picture shown at the Grand Opera House last night, proved one of the most wonderful pictures ever seen in Peterborough. Thousands of Canadian troops in all branches of the service, wonderful views of British Columbia and the North-West, an imaginary invasion of Canada, with German officers swaggering around in the King Edward Hotel and devastating houses in exclusive Rosedale, Toronto; the introduction of such well-known personages as His Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught, the Princess Patricia, Lieut.-General Sir Sam Hughes, and General Logie all combine to make the picture a triumph in interest and effect. No citizen of Peterborough should miss this great film story. Involved in the action are some wonderful views of the flight of the Belgian refugees from their war-stricken country and of the ruined villages and towns of Belgium. The martyrdom of Nurse Edith Cavelle is dramatically portrayed. The whole effect is most striking, and last night's audience was held enthralled from start to finish. Canada's "Battle Cry of Peace" is even more gripping than its American predecessor, and has to be seen to be appreciated. It will be shown at the Grand again to-night and to-morrow afternoon and evening. Don't think of missing it.

The 247th band will be the guests of the management to-night, and will play a number of selections outside.

The officers of the battalion have been invited to be present.

They were both picked up by the police last night, pleaded guilty before Magistrate Dumble this morning, and paid in their ten dollar fines.

What are Peps

Peps are the new treatment for coughs, colds and lung troubles. They are little tablets made up from Pine extracts and medicinal essences. When put into the mouth these medicinal ingredients turn into healing vapors, which are breathed down direct to the lungs, throat and bronchial tubes. The Peps treatment is direct. Swallowing cough mixtures into the stomach, to cure stomachs and disorders in throat and lungs, is indirect. Peps are revolutionizing the treatment of colds, as their price is within the reach of all. 50c. box all druggists, or Peps Co., Toronto.

GERMANY'S MEDICAL PLIGHT.

The London correspondent of the Medical Record sends these statistics relative to the mortality among the medical officers with the German Armies:

"The losses of medical officers in the present war are very heavy. In the Franco-Prussian war out of 4,063 German doctors with the army only 9 were killed and 69 wounded. In the present struggle up to Jan. 15, the German doctors killed numbered 56, wounded 216, and prisoners 40, besides which 94 are missing, 29 have died of disease or wounds, 5 have met with accidents, and 2 are sick, out of the total number of about 13,000 actually with the army, not including those in the military hospitals. Besides these, 10,000 are employed in reserve hospitals, sanatoria, prisoners' camps and ambulance trains.

"Germany has some 32,000 members of the profession, so only about 8,000 appear to be available for civil practice."

Kaiser Reported On Bapaume Front

Examiner Special:

PARIS, October 24.—Kaiser Wilhelm is reported to have arrived at the Bapaume front to supervise preparations for a heavy German counter-offensive north of the Somme, the Liberte reported to-day. Heavy reinforcements in both men and artillery are arriving at the German front, and there are indications that the Germans are alarmed at the Allied advance on Bapaume.

War Is Responsible For the H.C.O.L.

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

WASHINGTON, D.C., October 24.—Twenty million men fighting in Europe, producing nothing while consuming enough food for thirty million men, and enough clothing for eighty million bring the high cost of living in America, not Wall Street, Secretary of Commerce Redfield stated to-day. "The world is at war," he said. "It is probably within the truth to say that twenty million men of the most productive ages are withdrawn from productive work and are spending their time fighting. The world is, therefore short of goods by the amount that these men would produce if they were working instead of fighting."

Mackensen's Forces Reach the Railway

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

PETROGRAD, October 24.—Mackensen's forces have occupied the railway junction of Medjidiah, twenty miles west of Constanza on the Constanza-Cernavoda Railway, the War Office announced to-day, in a statement admitting the loss of Constanza.

The Russians and Roumanians continue to resist the enemy's advance.

The Petrograd statement indicates that all the Constanza-Cernavoda Railway from Medjidiah eastward to Constanza, or considerably more than half the railway, is now controlled by Mackensen.

Did Kitchener Wield Excalibar?

"Yet some say in many partyes of England that Kyng Arthur is not dead. But had my the wylle of our Lord Jhesu in to another place, and men say that he shal came agoyn and he shall wynne the holy crosse."—Malory.

"And afterwards I will come (again) to my kingdom, and dwell with the Britons with much joy."—Arthur in Layamon's "Brut."

In England the belief finds growing credence that Lord Kitchener was the reincarnation of King Arthur. Merlin's prophecy that he should live again and Arthur's own words as he lay dying are recalled. The manner of his death, the mystery of the man, his aloofness and his isolation all lend colour to the belief.

So much was Lord Kitchener the object of speculation when he lived, so greatly did Britain depend upon him for her salvation, so startling was the tragedy of his death it is not strange that the imagination and the heart of the people are quickened to a belief that this man was not as are the others of his day and generation, but that he came from out the vast mystery of power and space to save his people in their hour of peril, even as King Arthur in the long ago had issued from the unknown, a shining personage, to free his people from their enemies and make his nation age renowned.

Some one, seeking for the right word to describe Kitchener, hit upon "ruler" as the one that suited him best. It was written in his men and movements and a big mind that he was set apart for a high purpose, to rule men and to overrule the decisions of many in high posts of authority.

Recalling his march to Khartoum, his domination in Egypt, his reorganization of the forces in India and his last and greatest service of gathering into his hands the lines of scattered, diverse and conflicting authorities in regard to military affairs in Great Britain in the early, confused days of the present war, it is not strange that the minds of many persons turn back to those dim pages of legendary history for a parallel or a prototype; to the days when King Arthur, through the institution and puissance of the Round Table, drew all the petty princes under him and as their head made a realm.

The first view of the romantic figure of Arthur is as a plain knight, "riding a simple knighte among his knights, and many of them in richer arms than he."

Doubts and questionings concerning his origin ran around the court, but King Arthur continued unmoved to work for the good of his coutry, smiting his foes with Excalibur, that mighty, cross-hilted sword which the Lady of the Lake, "clothed in white samite, mystic and wonderful," had given to him. One one side of the blade, "so bright that men are blinded by it," in the oldest tongue of the world, were graven the words "Take me," suggestive of Kitchener's brief motto, "Thorough." In the other side, in King Arthur's speech, was "Cast me away."

Sage Merlin counselled him to take the sword, saying the time to cast it away was far distant. He also swore King Arthur should not die, but pass, to come again.

"The King will follow Christ, and we the King,
In whom high God hath breathed a secret thing," sang his knights, and like an antiphonal response were the bravely defiant words of King Arthur:—

"Time old order changeth, yielding place to new. * * * No tribute will we pay."

Out of obscurity came Kitchener of Khartoum. His father was an English gentleman and soldier, who, having settled in Ireland, lived unpretentiously and educated his sons to be loyal to their King and country. Horatio Herbert was not a brilliant lad, but he had a fine physique and the quality of thoroughness in all that he did. Already he seemed to have a vision of the time when Great Britain would need his services. His time, is efforts were devoted to the training for the army. That he should have fought for France in his youth seemed, too, to be prophetic. Fate had him in her hands, and when the old Duke of Cambridge took him to task for having joined the French army he replied that he did not like to be idle.

There was no time for idleness in the routine of the man who had set before him as his goal the greatness of the British Empire and had devoted his sword and his life to helping its achievement. When he marched to Khartoum the British public followed him with awe. He was referred to as the man who had made himself into a machine. As King Arthur had fought in great battle and overcome the heathen hordes, so did Kitchener pulverize the dervishes, smash the Mahdi's tomb and make England feared and respected.

"He has no age but the prime of life," wrote one who knew him well, "no body but one to carry his mind, no face but one to keep his wind behind."

He had no intimate friends; until late in life no home; there was no Guinevere.

BORGLARS HANG GIRL FROM DOOR

MONTREAL, Oct. 23.—A daring hold-up and robbery was perpetrated by two masked men, who broke into a house on Bailey street, gagging and hanging Eva Perrier with ropes from a door. The men, who are believed by the police to be members of a gang of robbers now operating in the city, made their get-away in a large gray automobile.

The girl was the only occupant of the house when the men broke in. One pointed two revolvers at her while the other rudely seized her and after forcing a handkerchief into her mouth, bound her with several ropes he had in his pocket and left her suspended by ropes from a door in the house.

The men then ransacked the house stealing $15 in money and clothes to the value of $75. Neighbours saw a big automobile waiting in the vicinity the police declare and into this two men were seen to rush.

The men of headquarters and No. 15 station are working on the case.

Fred Payette, address unknown, was arrested on the mountain yesterday evening by Constable Dufour after a chase of two hours. Payette is charged with firing ten revolver shots on the mountain. When searched ninety-seven keys, two revolvers, and a package of cartridges were found on him.

BLIND RIVER HAS ITS THIRD BLAZE

SAULT STE. MARIE, Ont., Oct 23.—For the third time this year the town of Blind River was visited by fire Saturday which resulted in a loss of approximately $20,000.

The fire is thought to have originated either from the stove or by cigarettes dropped on the floor of the Casino Opera House, which place had been used for a dance Thursday night.

Lacking a complete fire-fighting brigade, the citizens in general turned out to do what they could to stop the conflagration, which was subdued only after four business houses and two private dwellings had been reduced to ashes.

The tug Stover played an important part in fighting the fire by throwing a stream from its moorings on the river front.

Apart from the Casino Opera House, which was valued at $8,000, the other buildings destroyed were Mrs. McNamara's residence; R. J. Inkster, confectionery; the general store of J. R. Albert, and a store owned by M. Solomon.

Council Not Disposed to Accept The Proposal

At a meeting of the committee of the Whole Council, held last evening, the following resolution was adopted in connection with Col. Roy's request for information concerning the facilities for wintering a battery here:

On motion of Ald. Duncan and Ald. Evans, it was decided to wire Col. Roy as follows:

"In regard to your telegram for accommodation for horses and men, government has accommodation here for men. The city has no stable accommodation for horses, but accommodation for horses can be obtained at hotels and other stables."

It was estimated that the probable cost of supplying stable accommodation for a period of seven months would be about $970. This the city does not feel disposed to pay, especially when such a unit would conflict with the recruiting operations of the 247th Battalion.

ITALY COMMANDEERS ALL AVAILABLE EGGS.

ROME, Oct. 23.—The municipal authorities at Milan have seized 100 cars containing 15,000,000 eggs as the result of a campaign to prevent speculation. Milan, Rome and other centres have been cargoes for the last week notwithstanding the existence of immense stocks. It is expected that the government will fix a uniform price of three cents throughout Italy and resale and sell all eggs at this price.

Dear Sir,—Thanking you in anticipation for a place in your valuable paper. I was at the recruiting meeting on Sunday evening. I heard Major Campbell make the statement that the excuses he got from some mothers why their sons were not in khaki. Look at the crowd they have to mix with. Now in the Motherland, Duke's sons have to fight shoulder to shoulder with the poorest, and some of the toughest of men. There is no mother breathing who has sons that are too good, but they ought to be fighting shoulder to shoulder with the roughest man in Canada for the cause of liberty and freedom in this great war. I am a soldier's wife with four children. My husband served sixteen years in the Imperial service, saw service in South Africa and who enlisted in Sept., 1915, and now overseas in the cause of liberty and freedom.

HOW HUGHES FAMILY CAN HELP LLOYD GEORGE

Hon Col. J. L. Hughes Tells of Brother's Achievement

If David Lloyd George, British Minister for War, will sit learningly at the feet of General Sir Sam Hughes, Minister of Militia for Canada, he will "increase the efficiency of his department fifty per cent."

Honorary Colonel James L. Hughes told the audience all about it at Trinity Methodist church last night. "Lloyd George," said brother Jim, "has got to get rid of a great deal of the old red tape in the administration of his department. We have none left in our country. The present Minister of Militia has put red tape where it belongs. I remember an occasion when I was in his office at Ottawa. He summoned a subordinate to his desk, and said to him:

"'I told you seven months and a half ago to have repairs made to a drillshed in Vancouver British Columbia. What about it?'

"I Will Dust With Them!"

"The official began to explain. The Finance Department he said had held it up and he produced some correspondence over two inches thick. The Minister took the correspondence and threw it in the fire. 'If any department, Finance Department or any other, tries to hold up an order of mine, declared the Minister, 'I will deal with them. In the meantime if my order is not carried out within three weeks there will be another man to take your place.'

"Lloyd George," concludes Honorary Colonel "Jim" Hughes, after his recital of General Sam Hughes' achievement, "has got to make and is going to make just such changes in his department."—The Globe.

District Convention of W.M.S. At Mark Street Church To-day

The annual meeting of the Women's Missionary Society of Peterborough District of the Methodist Church opened at Mark Street church this morning, with Mrs. J. K. Moore of Smith, presiding. A large attendance of delegates was a feature of the meeting, and among those present were Rev. R. A. Whattam, Rev. Mr. Wickett of Fraserville, Rev. Mr. McKee of Bridgenorth, and Rev. Mr. Clare of Warsaw.

The opening exercises were conducted by Mrs. Switzer and Mrs. W. B. Kelly of Bridgenorth. Miss N. Sherin of Lakefield was appointed Secretary.

The reports from Auxiliary Mission Circles and Bands were highly gratifying, indicating another year of successful work concluded.

The Auxiliaries' reports were presented by the following: George Street Church—Miss Curtis; Trinity, Mrs. Pogue; Mark Street, Mrs. Smith; Millbrook, Miss Ryan; Ballmoboro, Miss Dawson; Warsaw, Miss Taylor; Fairmont, Miss McIndoo; Bethany, Miss Jackson; Bridgenorth, Mrs. W. A paper on "The Consecration of Our Abilities," presented by Mrs. (Rev.) Campbell of Pontypool, was greatly appreciated. Mrs. Shield gave a splendid address on the subject, Our Duties to our Missionaries."

During the noon recess luncheon was served in the basement of the church.

At the opening of the afternoon session the delegates were formally welcomed by Mrs. Whattam, and Miss Sherin of Lakefield replied on behalf of the visiting ladies. The programme as prepared for the afternoon's work was as follows:

The crops are very good over here but the farmers are late in harvesting because of the lack of help. The women are doing all kinds of men's work.

The girls are very fine. I have lots of fun with them. There are some dandies.

All the boys from Indian River are quite happy and looking alright. I have not been home yet but I expect to go this week. We do not expect the war to last more than another year.

We had a very nice trip across, the weather was good and the sea calm. I was not sick. We received a great welcome on reaching here. Harvey will be alright as he was always a good hand at making out for himself.

We are still under canvas and comfortable but expect we will move into huts soon. There are many Peterborough fellows here in different battalions and it is nice to see someone from the old town, even if you don't know him.

England is a very fine country. Some of the roads are cement and everything is very nice. The weather is a little damp but it is very hot during the day. We have not had much rain here.

Aeroplanes are flying over us all day and they are a wonderful thing.

I will close now. With best regards from your old friend,

ROBERT MORRIS

A cable received from London states that Gunner Ormond Cavanah of Peterborough reported wounded a few days ago has recovered from his injuries and has returned to his unit.

KINGSTON, Ont., Oct. 23.—According to information received from England this afternoon the 146th Frontenac Battalion has been absorbed into the 95th Battalion, Toronto, which is commanded by Lieut.-Col Robert Barker.

The Toronto Star has the following to say of Pte. Bruce Clarke of the 93rd Battalion, reported wounded on Friday:

Pte. Bruce Clarke has been dangerously wounded in the hip, according to information received by his mother, 110 St. Vincent street. He is now at No. 3 Stationary Hospital, Rouen. Pte. Clark enlisted at Peterborough with the 93rd Battalion, but upon reaching England was drafted to the C.M.R. A brother, Douglas, after 10 years in the Royal North-West Mounted Police, enlisted for active service, and has been over a year in the trenches with the 5th Howitzer Battery. Previous to enlistment, Pte. Bruce Clarke was farming near Keene.

In a letter to a friend, Gunner Sydney E. Armstrong, son of Mr. F. D. Armstrong, Margaret Avenue, written "Somewhere in France" says that he and Gunner Robert Thompson have been under fire several times. Gunner Armstrong commenced the letter on September 25th, and added a postscript on October 1st, before mailing it. In the meantime they had been up to their position two or three days and had been under fire several times. On September 30th, one of their gun crew had his shoulder blown off.

Gunner Armstrong mentions something about tobacco, which might be of interest to his many friends here: "I have run out of tobacco and it is hard to come any, but that is only a small matter after all and not worth worrying about. Of course it is quite needless to state that 'Bob' is exactly in the same boat with me. One 'fag' makes two or three smokes for the both of us. The same address will get us. Well, I think I will have to stop writing now. There is nothing to say, anyhow, as you understand, but that is no reason why you should not write a good healthy letter quite frequently. Trusting you are all to the merry. I remain, as ever, your old pal."—"BID."

Gunners Armstrong and Thompson went overseas with a draft from the Cobourg Heavy Battery, and are at the front with the 135th Canadian Siege Battery, going to France about September 23rd.

COMMENT ON CURRENT SPORT

Hockey salaries this winter will not go above the $600 mark and the magnates do not seem to be worrying either whether the players hold out or not. If the truth was known, it is probable that the club owners would just as leave not get this winter. Prospects for a good season look blacked every year. At least that is what the owners say.

Larry Lajoie's baseball career probably ended with the last season. The big Frenchman has been drawing $9,000 a season for the last three years, but with the close of the 1916 season that contract expired. Connie Mack said for only half the amount mentioned, the Cleveland Club handing up the other half. Lajoie who was one of the greatest players of all times is a man of wealth. He saves his money.

The Giants are picked to win the National League pennant next year and base ball scribes look for them to redeem the prestige of the old circuit if that is possible.

Nobody has any sympathy for the poor ball players and think of the trouble the Brooklyn and Red Sox players had signing for the world's series cheque.

Jack Barry couldn't play in the big classic this season because of an injured right hand, but reports have it that he signed for his cheque with ease.

Jack Barry is the player who is almost sure to get Bill Carrigan's job as leader of the world's champions if late reports are to be believed. It is said that Carrigan has recommended him to Lannin.

Eddie Trotter has his great little horse A. E. Allen out again to-day at Laurel but the race is at a mile and is just a trifle further than he cares to go.

George Kennedy should be able to pay Pittsburg next year. He made money last winter and thinks of the loose change he is picking up promoting scraps at Sohmer Park, Montreal.

There appears no question about the fact that Larry Gardiner and Hi Myers were the heroes of the world's series.

A dish of water placed in a hot oven when pies, cakes or puddings are being baked will prevent them from scorching.

By using sonow after when making starch the clothes will have a glossy appearance and the irons will be less likely to stick.

When making ice cream with fresh fruit do not add the fruit until the cream is frozen.

DECORATES CROWN PRINCE.

In an order of the day recently issued by the German Crown Prince to the army before Verdun announcing his decoration by the Kaiser, no mention is made of the chances of taking the fortress so long successfully defended by the French. The order reported in the German press, read as follows:

"On Sept. 9, his Majesty, the Kaiser, bestowed upon me the oak leaf of the Order of Pour le Merite. The recognition that is embodied in this high decoration is not limited to my person but extends to that of every member of my valiant army. It is the expression of thanks for the deeds of the army before Verdun. As this struggle is not yet over it is not possible to estimate even approximately the importance of the battles that have been fought without interruption since Feb. 21, and their influence upon the German struggle for existence. But one thing is certain already, and that is the fact that seldom in the history of war have such mighty deeds been demanded from and carried out by an army under such hard conditions in attack as well as in defence.

"Comrades! You have already shown yourselves worthy of your task. You may feel sure of my enduring thanks."

However high the standard of the ewes may be it cannot be retained without resorting to the use of the best and most suitable sires available.

British, Dominant In Air Photograph Foe Positions

Scarcely Foot of Earth Turned Without Camera Record Being Made—Fricourt Is Now Merely a Name—Scots, Heedless of "Straffing" Build Fire in Their Trench—Somme Front Described by American Correspondent as the Birthplace of the British Army.

SIGNS OF LATE FALL

NEW YORK, October 26.—The Tribune this morning publishes the following special cable from Arthur S. Draper:

British front on the Somme, via London—A visitor to the British sector on the Somme is struck immediately with the Allies' dominance of the air, an advantage which cannot possibly be appreciated unless one is acquainted with the topography of the battlefield.

From a certain position I have seen the church spires of Bapaume, the arrow-like Albert-Bapaume road black with the smoke balls of German shells as they burst over Thiepval, until recently a German stronghold, and the flash of British cannon as they hurled tons of explosives into Warlencourt and Ligny.

Behind the British guns floated twenty-four sausage balloons, while across the shell-swept plains just three of these mammoth gas bags, so valuable for artillery observations, could be seen. Back and forth sailed British aviators. Fluffy balls of black smoke broke now behind, now in front and now below the planes, but only once did an aeroplane alter its course; then, for a moment, it seemed to dive like a wounded bird toward its own lines, righting itself immediately. Time after time these birds, which are eyes to the gunners, came under German fire, but with one exception they attended to business as indifferently as a steeple-jack painting a tower flag pole.

These puffs of smoke high in the air resemble nothing so much as a flock of wild geese. To-day there are wonderful photographs of the British side, for Boelke and other German stars rarely visit enemy country.

AIRMEN TAKE PICTURES.

A mile or rubbish which once was Fricourt is about four miles from the German lines. To-day we lunched there in the open, undisturbed by Boche shells or aircraft bombs. Later I saw some wonderful photographs of the German defences made by British fliers.

Since the Germans began frantically to dig themselves in, after their first and second lines had been blown up or flattened out, hardly a foot of earth has been turned without the British making a photographic record of it. Recently the German air service has improved, but they have permitted the allies to steal a lead which appears almost hopeless for them to overcome.

Montauban, Contalmaison, Longeuval and Mammotz Wood, like Fricourt, are names only. Piles of brick and shattered tree trunks are the only identifying marks remaining. Even the elements could not have caused a greater destruction. In most places the ground was smashed to powder. Fricourt is a good illustration of the way the allies have attacked practically all strongholds in this offensive. The British and German trenches were about 180 yards apart here, with the Germans in possession of the hill from which their machine guns commanded a wide area. It was practically impossible to take the village before storming the hill, as a frontal attack exposed the attackers to machine gun fire from the village and the swell of the hill. When it is remembered that a single, well placed mitrailleuse can hold up a whole battalion, some appreciation can be had of the obstacles the British faced.

SIGNS OF LATE FALL.

Already there are signs of the late fall. Except for the wonderful ribbon-like, popular lined roads built by Napoleon, every lane is deep with mud. You know you are nearing the front by the increasing depth of the mud. British engineers are working marvels of road construction, but despite their efforts it is impossible to combat the mud, which covers everything behind the lines. I saw a detachment of Canadian infantrymen marching in from the trenches—tired, mud-covered fellows; later another party going out, spic and span with snap in every movement.

In this chalky, clay country, where the lightest rain produces a mixture which sticks to shovels like glue, it is marvellous to see miles of winding trenches, most of them dug under a murderous shell fire. As human burrowers the Germans have no equals. They have the most patience and industry of ants. To most British soldiers the war is a great game; to the Germans it is a business on which their life depends. The coolness of the British aviators is found also in the Tommies in trenches.

"HAE GOT OUR RANGE."

Some Scotsmen stationed in the front line, on a cold afternoon hunted around for wood to build a fire, there being no charcoal handy. An English officer on duty at their left saw the smoke and asked the Scotties: "Aren't you asking for trouble?" They thought not. A few minutes later the Germans began to "strafe" the trench. Finally one shell exploded just in front of the parapet. Sandy climbed up the trench steps, turned around and said: "Jock, throw on a bit more wood; they ha' nae got our range yet."

You see the same spirit everywhere behind the lines. Britain's citizen army has been through fire and come out veterans, who take the game as they find it. They play hard and fair; they respect "old Fritz," but they do not fear him. They want to see the end of the game, but they know that however long it lasts, they won't tire first.

The Somme battlefield is a picture of desolation and destruction, but it was the birthplace of the British army and the grave of Prussian militarism.

RETURN OF PRUSSIAN GUARD DECIMATED AND HUMBLED BY THE BRITISH AT CONTALMAISON

Furniture Vans Were Reserved for Those Who Had Expired on the Return Journey—Flower of German Manhood The Kaiser Sacrificed Them.

GRIM TRIBUTE TO BRITAIN

The London Daily Mail is just to hand, containing the complete article by D. T. Curtin, of Boston, dealing with the rout of the Prussian Guard—"the proudest military force in the world"—on the western front, extracts of which were cabled and published. Mr. Curtain was for ten months in Germany, and was given unusual opportunities for observation. He tells of the Guard, "came back to their home town decimated and humbled, the most amazing aggregation of broken men I have ever encountered." He watched them secretly as they were unloaded from the train. Having been informed that he could not see them, fearless he had a special pass from Berlin, he, by a ruse, obtained a vantage point in the station restaurant. He writes:—

DEJECTED AS WELL AS HURT.

The Prussian Guard had come home. The steel corps of the Army of Germany had met at Contalmaison the light-hearted boys I had seen drilling in Hyde Park last year, and in a furious counter-attack in which they had attempted to regain the village, had been wiped out. These were not merely wounded, but destroyed wounded. The whole atmosphere of the scene was that of intense surprise and depression. Tradition going back to Frederick the Great, nearly two hundred years ago, had been smashed—and by amateur soldiers. The fellow youth of sixteen who served my lunch was muttering something to the quartermaid, who replied that he was lucky to be in a class that was not likely to be called up yet.

The extreme cases were carried at a snail's pace by bearers, who put their feet down as carefully as if they were testing very thin ice, and who placed the comfortable stretchers in the very few vehicles which had rubber or imitation rubber tires. The work was done with military precision and great celerity. The evacuation of this train was no sooner finished than another took its place, and the same scene was repeated.

A TRAIN LOAD OF DEAD.

Presently the great furniture vans returned from having deposited their terrible loads, and were again filled. One van was reserved for those who had expired on the journey, and it was full.

This, then, was the battered remnant of the five reserve regiments of the Prussian Guard which had charged the British lines at Contalmaison three weeks before in a desperate German counter-attack to wrest the village from the enemy who had just occupied it. Each train discharged between six and seven hundred maimed passengers. Nor was this the first day of the influx.

FLOWER OF GERMAN MANHOOD.

The Guard had its garrisons chiefly at Potsdam, but also partly in Berlin, and represents the physical flower of German manhood. On parade it was inspiring to look at, and no military officer in the world ever doubted its prowess. Nor less it failed in the war to show splendid courage and fighting qualities. English people simply do not understand its prestige at home and among neutrals.

The Guard is sent only where there is supreme work to be done. If you hear that it has been hurled into a charge you may rest assured that it is striving to gain something on which Germany sets the highest price—for the life-blood of the Guard is the dearest that she can pay.

KAISER SACRIFICED THEM.

In the battle of the Marne the active regiments of the Guard forming a link between the armies of Bulow and Hausen were dashed like spray on jagged cliffs when they surged in wave after wave against the army of Foch at Sezanne and Fere Champenoise. Germany was willing to sacrifice those superb troops during the early part of the battle because she knew that Von Kluck had only to hold his army together, even though he did not advance, and the overthrow of Foch would mean a Teuton wedge driven between Verdun and Paris.

One year and ten months later she hurled the Guard Reserve at Contalmaison because she was determined that this important link in the chain of concrete and steel that coiled back and forth before Bapaume-Peronne must remain unbroken. The newly formed lines of Britain's sons bent, but did not break under the shock. They were outnumbered but, like all the rest of the British that the back-from-the-front German soldier has told me about, these fought on and on, never thinking of surrender.

COULDN'T BEAT TOMMY ATKINS.

I know from one of them that in a first onslaught the Guard lost heavily, but was reinforced and again advanced. Another desperate encounter and the men from Potsdam withered in the hand-to-hand carnage. The Germans could not hold what they had won back, and the khaki succeeded the field-grey at Contalmaison.

The evacuation of the wounded occupied hours. I purposely missed my train, for I knew that I was probably the only foreign civilian to see the historic picture of the proudest soldiery of Prussia return to its garrison town from the greatest battle in history. Empty trains were pulled out of the way, to be succeeded by more trains full of wounded, and again more. Doctors and nurses were attentive and always busy, and the stretcher-bearers moved back and forth until their faces grew red with exertion.

ALL IN.
